State Dep't report gives no support to torture allegations

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

he two cables from the U.S. con-ate in East Jerusalem alleging ematic torture are not supported the State Department's annual an rights report on Israel's ctices in the territories taken ng the 1967 war.

he overall U.S. assessment, ased yesterday, noted only that stances of mistreatment have oc-red." It did not claim that Israel "systematically" torturing oners.

fact, Assistant Secretary of e for Human Rights Pat Derian phoned "The Washington Post" rotest its editorial yesterday en-d "Allegations of Torture."

he editorial said that the human hts report "suggested" that el "systematically" tortures b prisoners. But Derian noted t the report did not make such an gation.

Administration officials are upset by the newspaper's reporting on Israel's human rights practices, based largely on cables from former consular official Alexandra Johnson. The initial account in the newspaper was not balanced, for example, by the much milder criticism of Israel in the official State Department report.

Because of Wednesday's "Washington Post" report, attention in the American media and among the public at large has focussed solely on Israel's human rights record rather than the other 100 countries included in the annual State Department document.

Indeed, only the sections on Israel and the territories have been published in the U.S. press, the remaining sections being still embargoed by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for release this weekend. (Congress in 1977 ordered the State Department to provide such reports on an annual basis.)

"The New York Times" yesterday, unlike "The Washington Post," reprinted extensively from the overall State Department report on Israel and the territories. It also reported Miss Johnson's accusations, mentioning prominently that she had been engaged last year to one of the Arab security suspects arrested by the Israeli authorities — a fact that many believe calls into question her credibility. "The Washington Post," in its initial report, buried this fact at the end of its lengthy story.

Israeli supporters here agree that the affair has been damaging to Israel's image in the U.S.

Spokesman Carter would not comment on a report in "The Washington Star" yesterday noting that Israel's security services (the Shin Bet) had informed the U.S. of Miss Johnson's supposedly suspicious activities on

Tamir: Israel remains humane

Jerusalem Post Reporter

In the face of severe vocations, Israel maintains the it liberal and humane attitude ards the Arabs in the ad-nistered territories," Justice ister Shmuel Tamir said yester-amir, who left a special cabinet sion to speak to reporters, was cting to the allegations of tematic torture of security soners published in "The shington Post" on Wednesday, gations which were based on con-ntial cables from the U.S. con-ate in East Jerusalem to the State artment in Washington.

he cables were sent by Alexandra nson, a 32-year-old former visa cer in the East Jerusalem con-ate who is reported to have been fly engaged to one of the West k Arabs she cited as an alleged im in her report.

recent agreement with the Inter-tional Committee of the Red Cross ows their officials to question urity detainees privately two ks after their arrest, Tamir said.

In special cases earlier interviews are granted. In only 6 per cent of the 1,287 prisoners the ICRC visited last year did they request investigations of torture allegations.

These investigations are conducted by the military government itself, but on request they are checked by the state attorney's office — "and we are totally satisfied that these were false allegations," Tamir said.

A senior Justice Ministry official said last night that the ICRC had even kept a doctor in Israel to examine detainees, but had sent him home several months ago because he was under-employed.

Tamir indicated that the government was amazed that "The Washington Post" had seen fit to publish charges which he called "utterly false, baseless and libelous" — and originating from a dubious source — without bothering to check them with the Israel authorities.

The justice minister added that unlike the British Mandate period, when thousands of people were kept under administrative detention, only 19 very dangerous suspects are today held under the same laws in Israel. A proposal to change the Mandatory Emergency Regulations regarding administrative detention is soon to be debated by the Knesset.

U.S. vows to protect Thais

WASHINGTON. — President Jimmy Carter has told Thailand that the U.S. will take definite action if fighting in Cambodia threatens Thai security, Prime Minister Kriangsak Chamanand said here on Wednesday night.

"The president has stressed this point many times," he said, without elaborating.

The Thai leader spoke to reporters after two days of talks with Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

Vietnam yesterday accused the U.S. of using the Cambodian war as a "pretext to delay the normalization of relations with Vietnam" and of acting contrary to its stated neutral stand in Sino-Vietnamese relations.

Vietnam's Communist Party newspaper "Nhan Dan" said that the Vietnamese people cannot but "remain alert to what the U.S. has agreed with China following the Carter-Teng discussions on the situation in Asia and the Pacific, including the Kampuchea (Cambodia) problem."

The article said that the U.S., while outwardly condemning the toppled Phnom Penh regime for its serious violations of human rights, has actually "encouraged Chinese authorities to support this gang to enable it to continue the border war against Vietnam."

Vietnam's official news agency, meanwhile, accused Chinese troops of conducting "fresh incursions" into areas of two northern Vietnamese border provinces, killing Vietnamese border guards and "upsetting the daily lives" of the local population.

The news agency, monitored in Bangkok, said that in four incidents Chinese soldiers on Monday and Tuesday had opened fire on Vietnamese border guards, killing six of them, wounding three and capturing two others.

The Soviet Union yesterday warned China that it was playing with fire by building up troops along its border with Vietnam.

The weekly Moscow magazine "New Times" said that the fall of the Pol Pot government in Cambodia was a blow to Peking and "now the snubbed dragon wants to show its claws."

In Tokyo, Japanese military sources said that warships of the huge Soviet Pacific fleet are cruising off Vietnam. They also said that Chinese troops were massed on the border with northern Vietnam and Chinese air force units in the region had been reinforced.

Egypt accepts invitation to ministerial talks in U.S.

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

Egypt yesterday formally accepted the U.S. invitation to participate in a three-way ministerial level meeting aimed at breaking the current deadlock in the peace talks with Israel.

The invitation was handed to President Anwar Sadat by U.S. Ambassador Hermann Eilts during a 40-minute meeting at the Abdin presidential palace in Cairo. Eilts told newsmen that, as reported in yesterday's Jerusalem Post, Prime Minister Mustapha Khalil will lead the Egyptian delegation.

Eilts declined to say whether the new session could be a prelude to another summit conference grouping Sadat, U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Prime Minister Menahem Begin.

The ambassador said that the exact venue and date of the talks will be announced in Washington. He would not say whether they will be held in Washington or at the presidential retreat at Camp David.

The influential Cairo paper "Al-Gumhouria" reported yesterday that the talks will begin on February 21, after Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance return from a visit to Mexico.

The paper said, quoting "Egyptian diplomatic sources," that the talks will "try in particular to define a timetable for Palestinian self-rule" as well as fix a date for elections in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

The official Middle East News Agency (MENA) yesterday quoted Egyptian Foreign Ministry sources as saying that a timetable for Arab autonomy must be linked to the peace treaty with Israel.

In another report from Washington, MENA said that senior U.S. officials did not expect a dramatic breakthrough to take place during the forthcoming talks. It said that Vance will urge the two sides not to consider the meeting as preparatory to another summit conference.

Immediately after his meeting with Eilts, Sadat flew to Ismailiya for an inspection tour expected to last 10 days. Sadat refused to make any statements and referred all questions to the ambassador.

On arrival at Ismailiya, Sadat was greeted by throngs of officials and citizens, including Aref Abu Bazzah, editor of the Jordanian newspaper "Voice of Palestine."

Ministers to fight wider say for Dayan

By DAVID LANDAU
Post Diplomatic Correspondent

"The Americans are not going to determine who decides for Israel," Minister without Portfolio Moshe Nissim assured The Jerusalem Post last night. Nissim and his ministerial colleagues are squaring up for a full-dress political debate at the cabinet on Sunday on the proposed Vance-Khalil-Dayan talks at Camp David, and on what ambit of negotiating authority is to be given to the Israeli foreign minister.

Perhaps, said Nissim, the Americans intend to re-create the rarified conditions of September's Camp David conclave in order to achieve concessions on the spot. But the cabinet, Minister Nissim maintained, would not waive its collective right and duty to make the decisions.

Another cabinet source confirmed that the majority of ministers would not agree to any proposal empowering Dayan in advance to depart from earlier cabinet decisions.

It was unlikely, moreover, the source said, that the cabinet would decide before Dayan left on fall-back positions which the foreign minister might adopt as the talks at Camp David proceeded. The danger of leaks was too great for the cabinet to resolve on such hypothetical concessions — even if they were ostensibly to be kept top secret.

Possibly the cabinet majority would agree to some — but not much — more leeway for the negotiating team if it included the National Religious Party's Yosef Burg — the minister of the interior — in addition to Dayan, the source surmised. In that case Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir of the Democratic Movement would also probably be voted onto the delegation, and perhaps a fourth minister too.

But even then, the source stressed, major decisions would, as at Blair House, have to be made "ad referendum" to the full cabinet. (Burg's presence, however, would provide greater certainty of their being endorsed.)

It is not yet clear whether Dayan still intends to demand broader powers than those invested in him at Blair House or at the Brussels meeting with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Egyptian Premier Mustapha Khalil in December. In informal talks with Begin recently he said that he would.

At yesterday's special cabinet meeting on the economy, Begin and Dayan reported briefly on the U.S. proposal for Vance-Khalil-Dayan talks at Camp David — but there was no discussion on the substantive issues or on negotiating powers. The premier told newsmen later that there would be a "political debate" in the cabinet on Sunday, at which all the issues pertaining to the negotiations would be aired.

Minister of Defence Ezer Weizman said last night that the government would soon be faced with the need to decide whether or not to reach an agreement with Egypt.

Bhutto won't appeal for mercy

RAWALPINDI. — The lawyer for former prime minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto said yesterday that his client will probably be executed next Tuesday or Wednesday because he is not filing a mercy plea petition.

Bhutto has been convicted of arranging the murder of a political opponent. British Prime Minister James Callaghan has appealed to Pakistan's military ruler, Gen. Zia Ul-Haq, for clemency, as have President Carter, other world leaders and international human rights organizations.

In extracts from a long hand-written letter said to have been received by Bhutto's eldest son, 24-year-old Mir Bhutto, the former premier wrote "only God almighty and the people can save me," the "London Daily Express" reported yesterday.

U.S. cuts Nicaragua aid, embassy staff

WASHINGTON (AP). — The administration of President Jimmy Carter, stung by Nicaragua's rejection of U.S.-supported mediation efforts, announced yesterday a drastic reduction in economic aid to the Central American country and a trimming of the U.S. embassy staff by half.

All 21 Peace Corps volunteers will be withdrawn and no new assistance projects will be considered until President Anastasio Somoza indicates a change in policy, State Department Spokesman Hodding Carter said.

Gov't accepts Treasury plan; housing to be discussed later

By SHLOMO MAOZ
Post Economic Reporter

The Treasury's much-discussed economic programme was adopted by the cabinet at its special meeting yesterday in a near-unanimous vote. Only Energy Minister Yitzhak Moda'i abstained, and no one voted against.

But the housing component of the programme has not yet been accepted, and a separate session will be devoted to it within the coming fortnight.

Finance Minister Simha Ehrlich rejected proposals made by several ministers concerning the economic policy during the course of the meeting. But there was agreement between him and Construction Minister David Levy on how to deal with the housing problem.

Ehrlich said his next step will be to present the revised budget proposals to the cabinet and Knesset for approval, at the end of this month.

Levy warned the cabinet of social upheavals if the housing problem is not solved. But he came out against a rental-housing solution, because few people could afford to pay an economic rent, and because investors are reluctant to put money into the sector under current inflationary conditions.

Ehrlich said that he and Levy were working on the principle that mortgages should be granted at the rate of 70-80 per cent of the value of the property. This meant that repayments would run at about 20 per cent of the average salary over a period of 25 years.

Social Affairs Minister Israel Katz was nominated by Levy and Deputy Premier Yigael Yadin to join the ministerial group that decides on raising the prices of subsidized commodities. He joins the ministers of finance, industry and agriculture on the body.

Katz called for a speedy agreement with the Histadrut on severance conditions for public sector workers. Without this, he warned, it would not be possible to carry out the recommendation in the Treasury programme that government manpower be frozen.

Katz and Ehrlich agreed to examine the possibility of guaranteeing the income of the lowest-paid groups in the economy before the Guaranteed Incomes Law is passed.

Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon provoked a ministerial flurry when he demanded a special discussion on whether his ministry's allocation

Congressmen back end to Nazi-trials limit

WASHINGTON (UPI). — One hundred members of the House of Representatives introduced a resolution yesterday urging West Germany to extend or abolish its statute of limitations for prosecuting Nazi war criminals, due to expire at the end of the year.

West Germany — under pressure from several other nations — extended the statute of limitations covering war criminals in 1965 and again in 1969. Israel, Poland and several other nations have already called on the Bonn government to extend the statute again or abolish it entirely, thus permitting the discovery and prosecution of war criminals any time in the future.

Maccabi hoopsters win 83-77 in Spain

By PAUL KOHN
Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Tel Aviv Maccabi hoopsters scored an important European Cup for Champions victory in Spain last night by beating Juventud Badelona 83-77 after leading 47-43 at the half.

The win places Tel Aviv Maccabi level on eight points with Real Madrid of Spain and Emerson Varese of Italy at the top of the playoff group.

Tel Aviv Maccabi was at the top of its form, playing especially well in defence. In the first half, Aulcie Perry was outstanding in attack, and in the second period Paul McCracken scored many fine baskets.

A full house of 5,000 in Badelona saw Maccabi start the game in lightning fashion, leading 12-2 and 16-4 in less than five minutes. But the Spaniards fought back steadily, and by their close marking of Motti Arouesti and Mickey Berkowitz, they checked Maccabi's advance.

The game was levelled at 24-24. It stayed even until 32-32 before Maccabi edged ahead to 47-43 at the break.

McCracken scored eight successive points to take Maccabi to 67-59 and then to 77-65. Badelona revived to 79-77 before Maccabi clinched their six-point win.

Top scorers for Maccabi were Perry with 22 and Jim Boatwright with 16. Miller and Santilliana led the Spanish side's scoring, each with 18.

Seminary founder Zaharoni dies, 66

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Menahem Zaharoni, who worked in education for decades and did most of it voluntarily, was killed yesterday in a work accident at the Shikmona archaeological site in Haifa.

Zaharoni, 66, established Beit Hankin in Kfar Yehoshua and headed it for 10 years without pay. He was awarded the President's Volunteer Medal in 1976 for his dedicated work in establishing schools and teachers' seminaries, and was well-known as a frequent substitute for teachers who were on reserve duty — again without accepting payment. He was last year awarded the annual prize of the Education Ministry.

3,600 new immigrants

Some 3,600 new immigrants arrived in Israel during January, a spokesman for the Ministry of Absorption said yesterday.

The ministry spokesman said that the number of Iranians arriving in January reached 677, twice the number who came in December 1978. But despite a relative growth recorded since October 1978 in the number of new immigrants, Soviet immigration declined by some 300 from December to January. Last month, 1,522 Soviet immigrants arrived in Israel.

Some 1,000 of January's new immigrants came from Western countries, the spokesman said.

Brown begins four-nation Middle East tour today

WASHINGTON (Reuter). — U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown flies to Saudi Arabia today with a brief from President Jimmy Carter to stress America's commitment to its allies in the increasingly unstable Gulf area.

The turmoil in Iran and potential threat to the West's oil lifeline mean that long-standing U.S. concern over Israeli-Egyptian peace talks will, for once, take second place in the order of Middle East priorities, according to officials here.

Brown's nine-day tour will also take him to Jordan, Israel and Egypt. He is slated to begin his Israel visit next Tuesday.

One Defence Department official described Brown's tour as a "confidence-building trip."

"It is to tell these key countries that the U.S. remains committed to its interests in the area at a time when the Soviet Union is trying to capitalize on the departure of the shah from Iran and is keeping a high profile in such countries as Afghanistan, South Yemen and Ethiopia," the official said.

"It is also a signal to the Soviets that this is one area where we would not sit idly by as they do what they wish," the official said.

Officials made clear that Brown will be talking to heads of state and government in each capital as Carter's personal representative.

Uncertainty about the policies of a possible future Iranian government controlled by Moslem leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini is in itself a cause for U.S. concern.

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger said on Wednesday night that loss of oil from Iran is potentially more serious for the West than the 1973 Arab oil embargo.

This is seen here as another factor which could be exploited by the Soviet Union, and also one which further increases the strategic importance of Saudi Arabia.

Defence officials said that in addition to discussing the Saudis' own future military needs, Brown was likely to review steps the U.S. has been taking to strengthen North Yemen.

North Yemen lies on Saudi Arabia's southwest border and just above South Yemen, where there is a Marxist government of which the Saudis are wary. King Khaled would like to see North Yemen strengthened to counter South Yemen.

Brown will go to Jordan on Monday for an overnight visit that will include talks with King Hussein.

His initial meetings in Israel will be with Defence Minister Ezer Weizman and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan. He will meet Prime Minister Menahem Begin on Wednesday.

Defence officials said Brown will discuss the construction of two new airfields in the Negev to replace bases that Israel will give up in Sinai under the proposed treaty with Egypt. One question is how much of the cost of the bases will be borne by the U.S.

Next Friday, a Moslem holiday, Brown will arrive in Egypt. He will spend most of that day touring Luxor, south of Cairo, and will meet Egyptian President Anwar Sadat a week from tomorrow.

Kessar hits Treasury plan; warns of service cuts

By LEA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The so-called "new economic programme" isn't a programme and won't solve the country's economic problems, Yisrael Kessar, acting secretary general of the Histadrut, said yesterday after hearing the results of the cabinet meeting.

The only element of the package which will help check inflation is the 3 per cent budget cut, Kessar said. But this is a two-edged sword because it will also cut back services — such as education and health — to Israel's workers.

"Now Finance Minister Simha Ehrlich says inflation will be 'only' 38 per cent, as if that were an accomplishment. He forgets that two months ago he submitted a budget with a 37 per cent projected inflation figure.

"I think that means his assumptions are once again going to be proven wrong, and we're headed for 50 per cent inflation like last year," Kessar said.

The acting Histadrut head added that the planned subsidy cuts will hurt low income families, since most of their budget goes for the essential goods and services that are subsidized.

Kessar complained that the programme makes no reference to the Histadrut's demand that tax tables be adjusted by 100 per cent of the index rise, as was done in 1978.

Escapee's brother to jail for bank job

By YORAM BAR
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Yosef Danino, who escaped from the Tel Aviv Courthouse a month ago and was captured eight days later in a Kiryat Ata flat with a girl friend, was sentenced yesterday to 10 years in prison for robbing a bank in Rishon Lezion.

Yosef Danino escaped one day before his brother, Moshe Danino, and seven other prisoners broke out of Ramle Prison. Police have so far been unable to establish any link between the two escapes.

Yosef Danino, known as a very violent and dangerous criminal, was sentenced to eight years in prison in 1973 for murdering a greengrocer. In addition, he has been convicted of robberies, breaking-and-entering and blackmail. He held up the Bank Hapoalim branch in Rishon Lezion several months ago.

Yosef Danino managed to escape from his guards as he was being brought to the Tel Aviv District Court for trial.

Judges Dov Levin, Yisrael Giladi and Nehemia Behr of the Tel Aviv District Court determined that Danino should be punished heavily for the safety of the public.

Danino, who confessed to the bank robbery, asked the court to send him to a psychiatrist because he is unstable. But the court rejected this by saying that "it is not worth bothering a psychiatrist."

His brother Moshe Danino and five other Ramle Prison escapees are still at large.

Dutch accused of boycott compliance

THE HAGUE. — The Dutch government was yesterday accused of going along with anti-Israel measures laid down by Arab countries with which Holland trades.

The charge was made by members of an all-party parliamentary commission that conducted an investigation into how Dutch companies were involved in the Arab isolation of Israel.

The chairman of the commission, Socialist legislator Harry van den Bergh, called for a full-scale parliamentary debate into the report's findings. The report concluded that Dutch firms were, on a large scale, signing anti-Israel declarations demanded by their Arab trading partners and that this practice had the tacit approval of Dutch government agencies involved in the transactions.

The report also slammed export companies, insurance firms, credit institutions, banks and chambers of commerce for their roles. It recommended that international measures by taken to protect businessmen from the Arab demands and called for action by the nine-member European Economic Community.

Dutch companies were giving assurances to Arab states that they had no business relations with Israel, the report said, and Dutch exports to Israel had in recent years shown a smaller growth than those to other countries.

In a debate on foreign policy in the Dutch parliament on Wednesday, a majority asked Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw to protest during his forthcoming visit to Israel against the policy of the government of establishing Jewish settlements in what they called "occupied Arab territory." Labour parliamentarian Max van der Stoel, the former foreign minister, stated that by "clinging to occupied territory" Israel would not find peace. (AP, JTA)

KISSINGER. — Former U.S. secretary of state Henry Kissinger on Wednesday night dismissed reports that he is considering running in 1980 for the U.S. senate seat held by Connecticut Democrat Abraham Ribicoff.

3 arrested in Rishon Lezion police bombing

By YORAM BAR
Jerusalem Post Reporter

RISHON LEZION. — The police have arrested three suspects in connection with the recent bombing outside the home of Eliyahu Maimon of the Rishon Lezion police.

In a press conference yesterday in Ramle, Nitsav Arye Ivtzan, commander of the police, Southern District, said that the police had enough evidence to indict the three.

The bombing, which occurred 10 days ago at 2 a.m. in Rishon Lezion, caused heavy damage to Maimon's flat and another three flats in the building. Maimon's wife and three children, who were asleep at the time of the blast, were not injured.

Rishon Lezion Mayor Hanania Gibstein told The Jerusalem Post that the police's fast inquiry and arrest of suspects had been justified because it was more important to capture persons who attacked a policeman than those who assault a regular citizen. "If we didn't catch those who hit our policemen, there will be no one to protect us," Gibstein said.

TREASURY

was adequate for "vital and urgent settlement needs." Defence Minister Ezer Weizman was the first of his colleagues to demand such a discussion for his own ministry's allocation, in relation to defence needs. He was followed by other ministers with similar demands — but all these came after the government had acceded to Sharon's original one.

Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir wanted death duties abolished, Religious Affairs Minister Aharon Abuhatzeira stood up for greater price supervision, Transport Minister Haim Landau demanded the restoration of the travel tax, and Health Minister Eliezer Shostak thought that the purchase tax should be lowered significantly to bring about a reduction in prices. But none of these ideas won support, and the Ehrlich plan was adopted almost in its entirety.

Bank of Israel governor (and government economic adviser) Arnon Gafny said he favoured the programme, but would like bigger cuts in the budget. The programme did not provide for bridging the payments gap, he said.

The ministers of foreign affairs and education had a wry exchange over the government's apparent debating priorities. When Foreign Minister Dayan said this was the first economic debate in the cabinet in 20 months, Education Minister Hammer replied that the government was permanently preoccupied with El Al affairs and teachers' strikes.

MINISTERS

He said he would urge the government to make a serious effort to give Egypt a favourable answer. Weizman was addressing the annual meeting of the Pilots Association.

Asher Wallfish adds:

Three Coalition MKs who reject the Camp David accords — Rabbi Haim Druckman, Geula Cohen and Moshe Shamir — have called on five cabinet ministers to reject the American invitation to a new round of talks.

They sent this appeal by telegram, to one NRP Minister, Zevulun Hammer (Education); three from the Likud, Haim Landau (Transport), Yitzhak Moda'i (Energy and Communications) and Eliezer Shostak (Health), and to the DM's Shmuel Tamir (Justice).

The telegram warned that the new Camp David talks were intended to break the government's last line of resistance, so that it will give in to Egyptian and American dictates.

Repentant defector's sentence is upheld

The Supreme Court yesterday rejected an appeal by Yosef Nawi, an Israeli citizen who returned to Iraq, turned over information to the Baghdad government and read propaganda over its radio.

Nawi was sentenced to five years in prison after his return to Israel, but appealed the sentence, calling it unduly harsh. He fired his lawyer and argued the case himself before the justices — and lost. (Itim)

Cafe-theatre in Haifa

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — For years Haifa residents have complained that "there's nowhere to go" at night in the city. Now, two young men who recently opened an art gallery, Zavit, in the cellar of the Haifa Journalists Club, have started a Saturday night cafe-theatre on their premises, to help remedy the situation.

Their first show is a short piece without words by the new German playwright Franz K. Kratz. It is a one-woman show, and thus ideal for the small space at their disposal.

Nava Sha'an, formerly of Habimah and lately of the Haifa City Theatre, plays a middle-aged woman, all alone in the world, who comes home from work and pedantically does her dishes, washes out her pantyhose, has her supper, watches TV, listens to the radio and then goes to bed after putting her greying hair into curlers. The show has a surprise ending, which we shall not divulge here, and leaves the audience with a lot of food for thought about the destiny of the lonely.

Sha'an carries off the piece with stark realism, which must have been the author's intention, down to undressing on the stage, albeit with momentarily subdued lights. Some may wonder what is the point of the whole exercise, but it cannot be shrugged off.

At IL60 per ticket, which entitles you to a cup of tea or coffee, the entrance fee would not seem exorbitant for the 75-minute show.

WHEN ASKED why they did not put on the show every night, gallery owners Nathan Zeituny and Haim Guri smiled. "If we can't fill the 70-seat theatre once a week, how are we to open every night?"

They noted that in view of the restricted number of tickets they can sell their publicity must be very restricted too, and they rely on word of mouth rather than on advertising.

They intend keeping the present show running for as many Saturday nights as will pay for itself, and will then change the programme. They hope to make a success of giving Haifaites "somewhere decent to go" at least once a week.

The present play, of course, is ideal for tourists as no Hebrew is spoken. The venture deserves Haifa's support.

Button up there, soldier!

By HIRSH GOODMAN
Post Military Correspondent

Military police have charged 509 soldiers arrested over the past 24 hours because of slovenly dress.

In a lightning, surprise and country-wide swoop, military police and specially designated officers pounced on soldiers — in the streets, at hitch-hiking stations and in army bases — who had their buttons open, their hats off or whatever else Chief of Staff Rafael Eitan has termed improper dress for an Israeli soldier.

Shortly after taking over command of the army last year, the chief of staff said that he intended to make the army look better. He said that sloppy dress was an indication of sloppy discipline. Yesterday's swoop was another in a continuing series of actions aimed at making his intentions a fact.

The 509 men and women in uniform (albeit dishevelled uniform) will be punished by short stints in the camp lockup instead of leave, and by fines, with the amount to be based on the degree of sloppiness (so many pounds per unbuttoned button).

A military source promised The Jerusalem Post yesterday that the "war" would continue.

Policeman to be tried for beating youth

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A border policeman will be tried for allegedly breaking the leg of a 17-year-old from the Jalazoun refugee camp, along the Ramallah-Nablus road. The youth is recuperating in Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital.

The incident occurred early this week during a curfew in the camp, after youths had hurled stones at vehicles passing by. Issa Ruman was being interrogated by the policeman, who says that the youth began a fistfight. The Border Guard command investigated and decided to press charges.

A curfew was declared early yesterday morning in Al-Amari refugee camp east of Ramallah. A large force of soldiers and police combed the camp and arrested about 100 youths suspected of taking part in demonstrations there this week. The youths' parents were warned, and the suspects were freed.

Saudis announce oil-price hike

TOKYO (UPI). — Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil supplier, has decided to raise the sales price of its crude by 14.5 per cent, the Saudi Ministry of International Trade and Industry reported yesterday.

The price hike applies to the crude oil the Saudis produce over their ceiling of seven million barrels, according to the ministry's natural resources and energy agency.

The agency said Saudi Arabia has decided to produce up to 9.5 million barrels.

IL500,000 snatched from bank counter

TEL AVIV (Itim). — A youth dressed in jeans snatched more than IL500,000 a million pounds worth of foreign currency yesterday afternoon from a counter in the Bank Leumi branch at 100 Rehov Dizengoff here.

At about 5 p.m. the dark-haired youth, wearing a checked shirt, was observed wandering about on the three floors of the bank. Suddenly he dashed down to the ground floor, bent over a teller's counter and grabbed a cardboard carton containing IL537,000 worth of dollars, Swiss francs and German marks.

In his rush to the door, the young man ran into a pillar and fell, scattering some of the note on the floor. None of the many employees and clients in the bank at the time made a move to apprehend the robber. He gathered up the cash and made his getaway in the direction of Jaffa, on an orange motor scooter driven by an accomplice.

Histour fined for travel-tax cheating

TEL AVIV (Itim). — The Histour travel agency Histour was fined IL30,000 in the Magistrate's Court here yesterday for making false reports to the Finance Ministry and the Education Ministry's council for youth exchanges in order to obtain reductions on travel tax.

The company's outgoing manager, Misha Skoropinski, was fined IL2,500.

the West Bank while she was still a low-level consul in Jerusalem.

"Johnson was suspected by the Shin Bet of aiding terrorists while there," the newspaper said. She reportedly was followed for about three years by Israeli secret agents and her telephone in Jerusalem was tapped," the newspaper continued.

"This was carried out in connection with the FBI. Permission to follow her and to tap her telephone was requested about six months after Johnson arrived in Jerusalem, but because of her diplomatic status the Shin Bet did not act until a FBI agent stationed at the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv approved."

In the past, there has been extensive cooperation between the FBI and the Shin Bet. For example, the FBI tipped off Israeli authorities about Sami Esmail's involvement with Palestinian Arab terrorists before he arrived in Israel and year. That information resulted in his arrest.

The State Department yesterday publicly came to the defence of Miss Johnson, insisting that allegations that she had mental problems were a "slimy lie."

Spokesman Hodding Carter III said that "medical considerations" had "nothing to do" with Miss Johnson's dismissal as a foreign service officer, as has been alleged by Israeli and other sources in Jerusalem and Washington.

"We deplore unfounded and uninformed reasons of her separation," he said, specifically denying again that her reporting on Washington last year on alleged "systematic torture" by Israeli authorities against Arab security detainees was behind the termination of her job.

But the spokesman would not provide the exact reasons, explaining that the U.S. Privacy Act prevented him.

Miss Johnson went into seclusion following the publication of two of her cables in "The Washington Post."

Christians consider independent South Lebanon

Beirut cuts off pay to Haddad's men

Jerusalem Post Staff

MARJAYOUN. — Major Sa'ad Haddad said yesterday that he might declare an independent South Lebanon if the Beirut government does not rescind its decision to stop paying his soldiers' salaries.

Haddad, commander of the Christian militias in the south of the country, told a news conference here that the Beirut authorities, apparently under Syrian pressure, decided several weeks ago to cease salary payments to his men. He told members of the international press and representatives of 45 villages in the south that the monthly payments of 500,000 Lebanese pounds (IL3.2m.) constituted "the only link between us and them (the Beirut government), and now they are cutting this link."

Haddad's spokesman, Francis Bizik, said the major would ask Israel to pay his men's salaries.

Despite the decision to stop the salaries, Haddad said that his soldiers would continue to fight "for the honour and flag of Lebanon." He said South Lebanon remained the sole sovereign territory in the country which had not fallen under the Syrian boot.

"We went to war, not for spoils, but for the liberation of Lebanon from the Syrians and their lackeys; and if they think they can break us by cutting off our pay, they are greatly mistaken," Haddad said.

Haddad warned that his troops would attack Palestinian Arab terrorists if they continued to infiltrate the region. He said that 2,000 PLO terrorists have crossed the lines of the UNIFIL peace-keeping force south of the Litani river since Israeli troops withdrew in June last year. He estimated the total number of terrorists in the south at 3,000.

Haddad told the news conference that not all the UN soldiers were carrying out their duties properly. The French, he said, are more involved in politics than in defence. He expressed his hope that the Dutch troops, due to arrive in the region soon, would do a better job.

During the past few days there have been several clashes between PLO terrorists and UNIFIL troops, Haddad noted. Several UN men were killed and wounded, he said, but the UN hardly reacted. Imagine what would have been the response had my men been involved instead, Haddad said.

Meanwhile, gunmen yesterday kidnapped 17 people along the coastal road leading from Beirut to the north Lebanese town of Tripoli, Lebanese Television reported.

The state-controlled television said the kidnapping took place about 35 km. from the capital.

The kidnapped were taken to mountainous territory, and military forces were chasing the gunmen, it said. There were no details as to who kidnapped the 17 or why.

A week ago a similar abduction took place on the same main road. Again 17 people were kidnapped.

UN Under Secretary-General Brian Urquhart will visit Lebanon and Israel next week to discuss recent developments in South Lebanon, diplomatic sources at UN headquarters said yesterday.

He will confer with Lebanese and Israel government ministers as well as with PLO chiefs, possibly including terrorist leader Yasser Arafat, the sources said. One purpose of the trip is to discuss a phased programme of action by the Lebanese government to restore its authority in South Lebanon.

2,300 housing starts slated for Ramot, Gilo

By ABRAHAM RABINOVICH
Jerusalem Post Reporter

There are to be more housing starts in the coming two months in Ramot and Gilo, the two largest of Jerusalem's new neighbourhoods, than there were in all of Jerusalem in the last fiscal year.

There are to be some 1,100 starts in Ramot and 1,200 starts in Gilo, bringing the total starts in the two Housing Ministry developments during the current fiscal year to 1,425 and 1,900, respectively.

In the last fiscal year there were only 1,200 starts in the public sector in the entire city, and only 400 starts in the private sector.

It will be some three years before the apartments started this year are ready for occupancy. In all, there are to be 4,500 housing starts in the public sector in Jerusalem this year, four times more than last.

The bullying Jerusalem neighbourhood of Neve Ya'acov, once the least desired of all the new suburbs, has proved in recent years to be one of the most desired locations because of lower prices offered by the Housing Ministry and a sharp reduction in the number of slum evacuees settled there by the ministry. Shmaryahu Cohen, director of the ministry's Jerusalem district, said recently that the neighbourhood is almost complete, with only 136 starts this year.

The pace of building is hampered, said Cohen, by the difficulties that the large building companies are having in reorganizing after the cutback of recent years.

Allon says Gov't erred at Camp David talks

TEL AVIV (Itim). — Israel should not give in to Egyptian pressures and should stand up firmly for its security needs, former foreign minister Yigal Allon said yesterday.

Lashing out at the Begin government's policies concerning the Camp David agreements, Allon told a seminar of the Kibbutz Hameuhad movement at Efal:

"A peace treaty should be achieved which fulfils two basic conditions: a promise by residents that under autonomy they will cooperate against terrorist actions, and a full military presence in areas essential for Israel's security." The government must not agree to the treaty changes Egypt is demanding, he stressed.

According to Allon, the circumstances prevailing at Camp David would have allowed the solution of issues central to Israel. "The status of autonomy, the issue of the peace treaty's priority over Egypt's original intention of eliminating Israel; the means for guaranteeing Israel's security interests, both those regarding terrorist activities and those in the event of a war on the eastern and northern fronts — all this should have been cleared up at Camp David."

Allon said that had these questions been dealt with at Camp David, where the negotiations were conducted on the highest level, "then the work on the secondary level would have been much easier and the peace treaty would today be signed."

As it was, the Camp David agreements should not have been signed, given that these matters were not cleared up there.

Concerning claims from various quarters that Israel "lacks flexibility," Allon said: "We hear Arab moral preachers and others ask us why we are obstinate over 'trivialities.' If these are trivialities, why is President Sadat so obstinate? He received everything he wanted even before the negotiations opened. If he's obstinate, it's a sign that he has constraints from home or from the Arab camp.

"I fear these constraints, and it's up to him to prove that he's capable of standing up to pressures from the Arab camp," Allon said.

Disagreement on whether PLO gunfire or accident caused UN 'copter crash

NETULLA. — Ground fire from PLO terrorists brought down a helicopter which crashed in South Lebanon last week killing four Norwegian soldiers, a UN inquiry has found.

However, while this version was reportedly given to Christian militiamen by French paratroop officer Capt. Oliver Saber, the Norwegian embassy in Beirut announced yesterday that investigations have revealed no foul play and the theory that the crash was an accident is gaining momentum.

And in Jerusalem a UN spokesman declared that a Norwegian Air Force commission of inquiry is continuing its investigations and that he would check with Capt. Saber about the allegation that PLO anti-aircraft fire had caused the crash. This report also appeared in the Beirut Christian newspaper "Le Reveil" yesterday.

"No one at the Norwegian embassy has said anything to "Le Reveil," and there is no indication there was any shooting in the area where the plane crashed," an embassy spokesman said.

At the time of the crash, he said, the helicopter had hit a high-voltage power line before going down with its four passengers.

"The preliminary conclusions drawn by the investigating team don't indicate any bullet damage on the wreckage," the spokesman said.

The crash occurred in the area held by French UNIFIL units while the helicopter was on its way to pick up a Fijian soldier wounded during a clash with PLO terrorists, in which two other Fijians were killed. The craft carried two Norwegian crewmen and two medical officers.

In Oslo, a public opinion poll released yesterday indicated that more Norwegians blame Israel than Egypt for the failure to obtain a Middle East peace settlement.

Of those polled 32 per cent said Israel was mainly responsible, while four per cent said Egypt alone was responsible.

Some 29 per cent said both parties were to blame for the failure to obtain peace, while six per cent said it was the fault of other countries, the poll by the Market and Media Institute showed. (UPI, Reuter)

Nablus mayor forbidden to travel abroad

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The military governor of Nablus, Aluf-Mishne Yosef Lunz, yesterday informed the Nablus mayor Bassam Shaka that he is forbidden to travel abroad and may no longer accept money from Arab countries on behalf of the Nablus municipality.

These steps were taken after Shaka attended a protest press conference in Hebron last week despite a military government order barring him from participating.

Lunz warned Shaka against repeating such behaviour in the future. The governor's action was taken only after high-level consultations during which even more severe steps against the mayor were considered.

In recent weeks the mayors of West Bank towns have been cautioned against holding rallies or press conferences of a political nature that contradict the policies of the Israel government.

Biologist favours thinning out of Galilee gazelle herd

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Technion biologist Dr. Dan Beharav, an expert on the country's gazelles, has taken sharp issue with the Nature Reserves Authority's tight policy against gazelle hunting in any form.

Interviewed yesterday by The Jerusalem Post, after recent prosecution of dozens of cases of illegal hunting, Baharav strongly advocated controlled hunting of gazelles in the Ramot Yisachar hill region in southern Lower Galilee. He noted that in the 40 sq. km. area, bounded by the Yavne'el, Tabor and Yisachar streams, the gazelle population had increased to an estimated 2,000 head.

According to Baharav, this area was once ideal for gazelles, as it had a proliferation of plants and plentiful, year-round water sources. However, the gazelle population has now reached a stage where the area can no longer fully support it, Baharav reports. Consequently, they are forced to seek nourishment in cultivated areas, causing considerable damage to farmers' crops.

"I believe that permitting controlled hunting of gazelles in a clearly defined area is the only solution to the problem. It will enable the authorities to keep the population down to a suitable number without harming the farmers," Baharav said.

He said the nature authority believes the time is not yet ripe for controlled hunting of gazelles in Israel "because there is no hunting tradition in the country." But, Baharov said, once controlled hunting is introduced the tradition would establish itself, and would curb the indiscriminate illegal hunting that is now going on despite the authority's efforts to prevent it.

Poland willing to negotiate reparations

TEL AVIV (Itim). — The Polish government recognizes the World Federation of Polish Jewry as the only body authorized to negotiate with it over reparations for Jewish public property and on research and memorial projects, according to Rabbi Alexander Schindler, who recently visited Warsaw.

Schindler, who recently stepped down as head of the U.S. Council of Presidents of Major Jewish Organizations, spoke at the world federation's convention yesterday. He said that Poland would welcome an official delegation from Israel for negotiations.

The Polish minister of religion has even offered to arrange an audience with the pope for the delegation on its way to Poland, Schindler reported. (Pope John Paul II is himself Polish.)

Shimron Shormei, a member of the Polish delegation to the conference, announced that a number of memorial institutions, including a research centre named after Warsaw educator Janusz Korczak, are being established in his country.

Hawks in Liberal Party form faction

By SARAH HONIG
Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Hawks within the Liberal Party have organized into a distinct faction, which will be based on a common ideology rather than on personalities.

The faction — the Liberals' first, they claim — is headed by former MK Yedidya Be'eri, and held its first meeting this week. The faction will take an active part in campaigning for internal party elections at the convention at the end of the year.

Members of the faction had managed during the last party convention to push through a resolution against any territorial concessions without a peace treaty. This resolution had been adopted despite opposition from party leaders at the time.

The group, Be'eri told The Jerusalem Post, decided to organize into a faction "partly as an expression of protest against the ideological poverty characterizing the party and against the absence of any programmatic debate. All that we see are purely personal rivalries in the Liberal Party, exhibiting to the public a leadership torn asunder by inner squabbling. We demand that the party take up issues and concern itself with who represents what and not with who is out to get whom."

The group charges that issues such as the new economic plan were not brought before any party forum prior to their introduction to the cabinet. Another complaint is that the autonomy plan for Arabs in the territories was not discussed in the party.

Thus far, internal Likud criticism of the government's peace plan has been limited to the other parties in the bloc — splitting La'am and bringing about the creation of the Herut Loyalist Circle. This is the first indication of organized Liberal opposition to Prime Minister Menahem Begin's autonomy scheme.

Beit Halohem engineer denies knowledge of pyramid pricing

HAIFA (Itim). — Engineer Menahem Finkelstein, who participated in planning the internal structure for the still-unfinished Yad Labanim building (part of the Beit Halohem complex) here, told the District Court yesterday that he had no connection with the contractor on prices of pricing and cost.

Finkelstein was testifying at the trial of his partner, construction engineer Saki Rosenhaft and two municipal officials, Haim Pik and Israel Giacomo. The three face charges of conspiring to defraud Haifa municipality by submitting false accounts for the construction of the steel pyramid as part of the complex.

The pyramid was originally planned in concrete, but it was later decided to build it of steel instead, allegedly to save time and money.

Finkelstein told the court that he had no intention of defrauding anyone when he explained the proposed change from cement to steel to municipality representatives.

He maintained that the contractor's original estimate was based on construction of the pyramid in concrete, and that the change was made at a time of rapidly rising prices, when each day's delay justified demanding a higher price for the work. It was impossible to estimate for the steel pyramid on the basis of the original plan, he said.

Finkelstein maintained that he did no more than advise the Haifa municipal representatives on the proposed change of plan. Architect David Yannai, whose suspicions and complaints to the police led to the bringing of charges, has alleged that the construction engineer Rosenhaft made an error in the planning of the concrete pyramid which led to the change of plan.

The mistake is said to have been concealed from the municipality for a significant period.

But Finkelstein claimed yesterday that at a meeting with city officials he had "simply presented the problem," and denied saying that the change was essential. He also said that had the city not agreed to the change, the intention had been to go ahead with the original plan and build in concrete. Finkelstein said Yannai had been present at the meeting.

'Many elderly needn't be hospitalized'

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Twenty per cent, perhaps as many as 50 per cent, of the elderly patients hospitalized in Israel for chronic diseases don't belong in hospital, according to Dr. Rafael Schen, 57, head of the geriatrics department at Ichilov Hospital here.

Speaking recently to doctors at a course for continuing medical education, he declared that "some should be in nursing homes where the upkeep is much cheaper. Others could even be sent home, if they could attend a day hospital, which is also much cheaper."

Dr. Schen admitted that no in-depth study has been made of the subject in Israel. But, he said, a small check his department made of 29 patients resulted in 11 patients being completely rehabilitated. Another seven were partially rehabilitated, and only 11 were sent on to hospitals for the chronically ill.

He believed, however, that the situation here is similar to that in Liverpool, where a study lasting several decades has been made. In 1950, Liverpool had 1,300 beds for the chronically ill, and a waiting list of 300-500 persons; 25 years later, after a comprehensive geriatric service was established, the number of hospital beds had dropped to 500, and the waiting list had disappeared, although the number of elderly persons (men and women over the age of 65) had doubled.

"Moreover, their quality of life improved tremendously," he said.

The Liverpool geriatric system consisted of providing the elderly with psychological, psychiatric, social and physical ("meals on wheels") services, he added.

Dr. Schen said that "the same process is not possible in Israel, due to several basic reasons." First, Israeli doctors looked towards the U.S. for their advanced training and "geriatrics in the U.S. is 30 years behind that of England."

The result is that only the Ben-Gurion Medical School in Beersheba is teaching geriatrics as an important branch of medicine, the other medical schools — in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and Haifa — giving their students only minimal training, he said.

"Moreover, geriatrics is not recognized as a specialization in Israel, and every young doctor wants to be a specialist," he continued.

Although there are several "day hospitals" in Israel, he maintained that they are not large enough to cope with the problem.

"One reason why children who love their parents put them in hospitals for chronic ailments is simply that the children no longer have the physical and psychological strength to keep them at home," he said. "The children can take so much — and then they break. In England, they have vacation hospitals for patients of this type. The elderly are put in the hospitals for a month, then they go home for a month, and this doubles the amount of beds available, while halving the strain on the children."

Two arrested during protest at Haifa U.

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Two men were arrested on the Haifa University campus yesterday as some 60 Arab students demonstrated against what they termed political discrimination against them at the country's universities.

One man, an Arab student, was detained on suspicion of violent behaviour during a clash on the campus a week ago. He will be remanded this morning. The other is described as a deserter from the army, reportedly a Druse.

The demonstrators protested against the "stay-at-home" order issued against six Arab-nationalist students of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, said to be associated with an expression of support for the terrorist PLO.

Court upholds right to cancel land-lease if promise to build not fulfilled

The Israel Lands Authority is entitled unilaterally to cancel leases if its tenants do not fulfil commitments to build on leased land, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

The decision concerned a plot leased to Ya'acov Re'ev in 1962 within a planned government industrial zone, on which he undertook to build and manage a restaurant. The area was never developed, so Re'ev did not build his restaurant, but he continued to pay yearly rent as billed by the authority.

Plans for the area were reactivated in 1975, and the administration decided to lease the land to the Elko corporation instead of to Re'ev. The latter sued and was awarded IL200,000, the land's value in 1975, by a district court.

But the Supreme Court overturned the decision in yesterday's verdict. An opinion writted by Justice Miriam Ben-Porat said that Re'ev relinquished his rights by failing to build. But the court ordered all rental payments returned to him. (Itim)

Berlin Jewish teacher turns other cheek

BERLIN (AP). — An American teacher, outraged by anti-Semitic abuse from German pupils yesterday cautioned against viewing the incident as a widespread manifestation of neo-Nazism in West Germany.

"I am worried that a news story will give people the wrong impression, that people are going to have a lot of prejudices against Germans and Germany," said Thomas Still in his first interview since the West Berlin newspaper "Tagesspiegel" last Friday revealed that ninth graders called him a "Jewish pig."

"These incidents occur in every country, including the U.S.," Still said in a telephone interview with the Associated Press. "It is a general problem in society."

Still declined to be photographed or to give his age or hometown, but city officials said he was from New York and in his early 30s.

He said the incident occurred nine weeks ago when four pupils drew a swastika and a Star of David on a blackboard in his religion class. They added the slogans "Gas the Jewish pig" and "There is nothing better in the world than to throw Jews into the gas chamber," Still said.

The incident occurred before "Holocaust," the American series on the Nazi mass murder of Europe's Jews, rocked Germany in a week-long telecast.

They didn't know what hit them, but there were no hard feelings

TEL AVIV (Itim). — A Jaffa woman and a little boy from a village near Lod were both struck by projectiles yesterday — and literally didn't know what hit them.

Matilda Farhi, 50, of Jaffa, told police that while she was waiting at a bus stop on Sderot Yerushalayim yesterday morning she felt a twinge in her head. She didn't regard it as important and went on her way to visit a friend. But when she put her hand to her head, she found it was covered in blood.

Magen David Adom doctors found and removed a pellet fired from an airgun in the skin of Mrs. Farhi's scalp.

Also yesterday morning, the parents of a three-year-old boy from the south Samaria village of Budrus near Lod brought the child to Rehovot's Kaplan Hospital because he had complained of severe stomach pains. The doctors found an incision in the skin, and told the astonished parents that an X-ray showed the child's stomach had been penetrated by a bullet. There were no signs of bleeding.

The bullet was removed and the child is out of danger. Police are investigating the incident.

Some soldiers among demonstrators

Million march to back Khomeini

TEHERAN (AP). — An estimated one million people, including hundreds of uniformed soldiers, marched through Teheran yesterday in support of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolution.

The turnout of military men was the biggest yet seen in an anti-government demonstration here, giving Prime Minister Shapur Bakhtiar further cause to question whether lower-ranking soldiers would back his government in a showdown with Khomeini.

Bakhtiar remained defiant, however, vowing not to surrender to the Moslem religious leader and accusing him of depending on the "mob" rather than on democracy.

New political violence was reported in the Caspian Sea town of Gorgan, where the state radio said four anti-government demonstrators were killed and 21 injured. The broadcast said that the security forces opened fire when protesters set fire to shops, banks and other buildings.

Khomeini had called for a massive turnout in the streets yesterday to keep up the pressure on the prime minister to give way to Mehdi Bazargan, a long-time political foe of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi who was named by the Ayatollah on Monday to head a new provisional government.

A stream of Iranians 3 km. long flowed through central Teheran, waving pictures of Khomeini and Bazargan, chanting "Bazargan, Bazargan, you are our prime minister," and "Bakhtiar, Bakhtiar, you take orders from the U.S.A."

The demonstrators marched from Teheran University to Shahyad Square, which they have renamed Liberty Square.

The state radio said that more than one million people marched.

The organizers claimed that 1,000 air force and army men joined the march, many with their families, to show their loyalty to Khomeini and their defiance of their commanders' pledge that the 430,000 men of the armed forces would defend Bakhtiar's government. Journalists reported seeing as many as 200 soldiers in the march.

Five soldiers in fatigue uniforms, apparently privates, were carried on the shoulders of marchers.

"The army must obey Bazargan," the marchers chanted, tossing flowers to the soldiers.

To head off a possible confrontation, Bakhtiar had ordered riot troops to stay out of sight during the demonstration and to go into action only if violence developed.

Smaller pro-Khomeini demonstrations were reported in Isfahan, Iran's second-largest city, and in Mashhad.

Bakhtiar, speaking at a news conference, condemned Khomeini for "putting people in the streets and giving them slogans they don't even understand." He challenged the Moslem religious leader to form a legitimate political party to seek control of Iran.

Bakhtiar said he was ready to talk with Bazargan, an old associate in the opposition to the shah, "to find solutions to the problem of unity."

Bakhtiar yesterday disclosed that he met with Bazargan about 10 days ago, shortly before the ayatollah returned after more than 14 years in exile. He said that since then he has maintained telephone contacts with people close to Bazargan.

Asked if he might agree to a national referendum to decide between the monarchy and Khomeini's "Islamic republic," Bakhtiar said: "In calm and democracy, yes. But in grenades and Molotov cocktails, never."

The 62-year-old prime minister said he might call national elections in five or six months, but "in the present conditions, it would be impossible to hold them. It would be a catastrophe."

Khomeini's supporters have taken over administrative and some police functions in Isfahan, Qom, Shiraz and other cities, and on Wednesday striking government employees in the justice ministry and the prime minister's office, and on the staff of the official Pars news agency, announced their support for Bazargan.

Bakhtiar threatened in an interview published in Paris yesterday to order the arrest of any members of Khomeini's provisional government if they tried to move into ministerial offices. He also told the Teheran correspondent of "Le Monde" that he had ordered discontinuation of pay for strikers as of the end of the month.

Certain strikes would have to be broken, he said in the interview, conducted yesterday. (AP, Reuter)

Sithole says 25 states will recognize Rhodesia after poll

SALISBURY. — Twenty-five countries have promised to recognize the new Zimbabwe Rhodesian government scheduled to emerge from elections in April, a black member of the transitional administration said yesterday.

In an interview with "The Rhodesia Herald," the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, one of four members of the coalition's Supreme Executive Council, said the pledges had been made by 18 countries in Africa, five others in the West and two in the East.

"He declined to name them, saying it would be premature to do so," the "Herald" reported. "But he said the only condition for recognition laid down by these countries was that it should be a majority government."

A national unity coalition — in which whites, outnumbered 27-to-one by blacks, would have a 28 per cent share — is planned to follow Rhodesia's first universal franchise elections. The Patriotic Front guerrilla alliance, which enjoys wide international support, has promised to fight the scheme.

In Cape Town, South Africa, U.S. Ambassador William Edmondson yesterday rebuffed a Rhodesian government invitation to observe the election, scheduled for April 20. He called the invitation a propaganda exercise, and said "it is normal practice to return official communications from regimes with which we do not have official relations."

The Rhodesian transitional administration's credibility with the nation's blacks suffered another blow yesterday with the claim by church sources and relatives that two blacks convicted of guerrilla activities have been hanged in the past three weeks.

Government sources would not confirm or deny the executions, which would contravene an unofficial pledge by the government not to execute prisoners convicted of war-related crimes.

Black leaders participating in the regime said that such a pledge had been unofficially made with their acceptance of office last March. (Reuter, UPI, AP)

Greece, Turkey renew talks on Aegean

ANKARA (Reuter). — Greek and Turkish foreign ministry officials renewed talks here yesterday on long-standing disputes between their two countries, including rights to the Aegean Sea and the air space above it.

The two-day talks are the third full round between senior officials of the two countries' foreign ministries, Byron Theodoropoulos of Greece and Sukru Elekdag of Turkey, following meetings in Ankara and Athens last year.

It was a meeting of premiers Bulent Ecevit of Turkey and Constantin Karmanlis of Greece in Montreux last spring which led to the technical talks on delineation of the Aegean continental shelf and control of Aegan air space.

Turkey claims that its western coastal shelf extends halfway across the Aegean, taking in the waters around many Greek islands. Greece says the islands should have continental shelves of their own.

As for the air space above, Greece closed it to all traffic but its own after Turkey seized the northern part of the Mediterranean island of Cyprus in 1974.

U.S. officer lifts his language ban

BONN (UPI). — A U.S. Army infantry commander has lifted his controversial ban on the use of Spanish by soldiers during duty hours, but he will continue to discourage it, the "Stars and Stripes" reported yesterday.

The daily newspaper of the U.S. forces overseas said that Lt. Col. William Landgraf, commander of the 1st battalion, 4th infantry regiment, rescinded on Wednesday the ban he imposed in December.

But he added he was withdrawing only his written ban and would continue to give soldiers what he called "verbal guidance" to discourage the use of Spanish.

He gave no reason for lifting the ban but the "Stars and Stripes" noted reports that he had been criticized widely by Hispanic organizations.

Landgraf imposed the ban because Spanish-speaking soldiers made up 15 per cent of his unit and "some can hardly speak a word of English."

The ban had applied only to duty hours and not to off-duty hours, mealtime or training breaks. Landgraf lifted the ban one day after the "Stars and Stripes" published a front page story about it.

Big welcome for Teng on return home

PEKING (Reuter) — Vice-Premier Teng Hsiao-ping received an impressive welcome from other Chinese leaders on his return yesterday from the U.S. and Japan, reflecting the importance Peking places on its new relations with Washington.

The official Hsin Hua news agency described Teng's eight-day visit to the U.S., the first by a top Chinese Communist official, as "a complete success."

The vice-premier was relaxed and smiling broadly when he left the special Boeing 707. About half the party politburo were lined up to shake Teng's hand. But his first greeting — and a big hug — went to his small granddaughter.

Sources said the vice-premier, who is also a party vice-chairman, had recovered from the cold he caught in Seattle on the final leg of his hectic U.S. trip.

China regards the U.S. visit as a major success, and Hsin Hua said "it is expected that .... friendly exchanges between the two countries and their relations in other fields will experience a new growth."

American businessmen and technical experts are already flooding into China, although technical problems such as frozen assets still have to be worked out. Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal is due in Peking late this month, and Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps next month, to discuss these questions.

But American business initiative has already crossed the border in the form of an initial 20,000 cases of Coca-Cola.

London council locked out by strikers

LONDON (Reuter). — Strikers in Britain's wave of pay unrest have locked a London council out of its town hall and forced it to operate from secret offices.

Tower Hamlets town hall, near Thames in London's East End, is not in use because caretakers, who began a strike for more pay 10 days ago, refuse to unlock the doors and offices.

The 1.5 million low-paid British workers campaigning for a £60 weekly wage also include dustmen. Mountains of uncollected garbage on many London pavements are beginning to stink. The London "Evening Standard" yesterday carried pictures of rats which it said were leaving West End sewers for rich pickings among the piles of rubbish.

At Tower Hamlets, council workers have pushed their action further than any other of the one million local government manual workers — because, they claim, the council will not talk to them.

So a game of hide-and-seek has developed, with a skeleton staff of council officers trying to keep services running from a secret office, currently in the World Trade Centre on the Thames bank.

But the council has been forced to move its temporary office twice already because strikers have found it and mounted a picket.

There was better news yesterday for the state-owned British Leyland car giant. Several thousand workers in two plants at Cowley, central England, voted against a strike.

Nearly 20,000 men at the biggest Leyland car plant, Longbridge in Birmingham, have already walked out over the company's refusal to make productivity payments. The company says the promised target of 6.1 cars per worker annually is not being met.

Leyland has bluntly warned that its cars division, rescued by the British government in 1975, will not survive a prolonged strike.

Non-medical staff yesterday went on strike at London's 300-bed St. George's Hospital, leaving surgeons to wheel patients to the operating theatre.

In another action of the type which has reduced half of Britain's 2,300 hospitals to emergencies only, the 600 ancillary workers at St. Bartholomew's, a leading London hospital, voted to strike on Monday.

4 Red Guards die for '60s crimes

HONGKONG (AP). — Four former Red Guards were executed in Peking last month for raping, torturing and killing victims during China's tumultuous Cultural Revolution of the 1960s, Peking Radio has reported.

A transcript of a February 1 broadcast over the radio's domestic network, seen in Hongkong yesterday, said that four other Red Guards were found guilty of similar offences by the Peking municipal intermediate people's court at the same trial on January 16 and received life sentences of imprisonment.

The Red Guards were an army of teen-agers who swept through China during the "Cultural Revolution," carrying out the orders of a radical clique led by Chiang Ching, wife of Communist Party chairman Mao Tse-tung. The clique was purged in 1976 following Mao's death.

U.S. warns Cuba over Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP). — The U.S. is worried about possible Cuban intervention against the Somoza regime in Nicaragua and has expressed this concern directly to the Castro government, it was reported on Wednesday.

In a report which U.S. President Jimmy Carter transmitted to Congress, Nicaragua was listed as one of several "problem areas" blocking renewal of U.S.-Cuba diplomatic relations, severed since 1961.

According to a secret CIA report made available to the Associated Press last year, intelligence officials claimed to have evidence that Fidel Castro's Cuban regime has furnished weapons to Sandinista guerrillas battling the forces of Anastasio Somoza.

Tito in Damascus

DAMASCUS (Reuter). — President Tito of Yugoslavia arrived here yesterday from Baghdad for an official four-day visit as part of a tour of Arab states.

He was greeted at the airport by President Hafez Assad and Syrian government leaders.

Official sources said the Syrian and Yugoslav heads of state would have two rounds of talks, dealing with strengthening bilateral relations, Middle East developments and questions of mutual interest, including the non-aligned movement.

Giant Vienna store razed by blaze

VIENNA (AP). — Vienna's Gerngross department store was a smoking ruin yesterday morning after a blaze that caused damage estimated to be well over $100m., but no casualties.

It started before midnight when the store — Vienna's largest — was empty except for a night porter and workers doing a welding job on an escalator.

Fire chief Anton Santyr said workers using manual fire extinguishers tried to stop the fire, which began in the lining of the escalator. When they failed, the night porter called the fire brigades. But the fire spread quickly through the first two floors of the four-storey building, despite the efforts of 200 firemen and 30 fire trucks.

Manila may force refugees to sail for Hongkong

HONGKONG (Reuter). — Faced with the arrival of almost 9,000 refugees from Vietnam in the past two months, Hongkong prepared yesterday for the arrival of 2,000 more Vietnamese now stranded on a ship off the Philippines.

In Manila, the Philippines government told UN and British representatives that it would order the Hongkong-owned ship, the Tung An, to leave Manila Bay for the British colony, the vessel's original destination. Both the UN commissioner for refugees and Britain were trying to persuade the Philippines not to carry out the threat.

A spokesman for the Hongkong government, commenting on the possible Philippine action, said it would be illegal to force a deregistered ship to sail. The Tung An's registration in Panama was cancelled by that country for alleged violation of regulations.

Hongkong's latest refugee problem began on Wednesday when the freighter Skyluck arrived with 3,000 Vietnamese aboard. An elderly woman refugee was taken off the ship today for hospital treatment, but officials said conditions on board were generally good and that Hongkong did not intend to bring other refugees ashore at the moment.

"Our camps are full," a spokesman said.

The Skyluck's Taiwanese captain, Hsia Hung-din, was being questioned by police about why his voyage from Singapore to Hongkong took 27 days, although scheduled for only five.

The captain said the 3,500-ton freighter, built in 1961, had broken down several times. He said he had picked up the refugees at sea and that the breakdowns had occurred both before and after this. But his logbook had been lost and no documents were produced to support his statements, official sources said.

Under recently passed legislation, captains face four years imprisonment and seizure of their ships if convicted of bringing unscheduled passengers into Hongkong.

Floods in southeast Brazil kill 382

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP). — A month of rain and flooding in southeastern Brazil has killed at least 382 people and left 250,000 homeless. But the problem in the far south is drought, which has caused an estimated $1b. in crop damage.

Renewed rain on Tuesday in the hardest-hit east-central states of Minas Gerais, Espirito Santo and Rio de Janeiro have raised fears the situation might worsen. Highways, railroads, bridges and telephone lines were washed out.

More than 300,000 anti-typhoid shots were given in the flood zone, but a Minas Gerais spokesman said the health situation in his state is still very serious.

There were no official estimates of monetary losses in the flooded region.

Congo names new head of state

BRAZZAVILLE, Congo (Reuter). — Col. Denis Sassou-Nguesso has been named Congolese head of state to succeed President Joachim Yhombi-Opango, it was officially announced yesterday.

The 37-year-old colonel was a leading member of the military committee which has governed the country, known as Congo-Brazzaville, since the assassination of President Marien Ngouabi in March 1977. He also served as defence minister.

Yhombi-Opango handed over power on Monday to a four-man presidium of the country's sole permitted political party.

Actors reject American Moor

LONDON (AP). — The British Broadcasting Corporation is postponing its TV production of Shakespeare's "Othello" because British Equity, the actors' union, is refusing to allow American actor James Earl Jones to play the lead.

BBC Television's drama chief, Sean Sutto, announced the decision on Wednesday night. The BBC insisted that Shakespeare's moor be played by a black. The actors' union contended that he should be a Briton, but the BBC insisted that Jones was the best qualified black actor.

'Russians get away with anything'

LONDON (UPI). — Harold Macmillan, the grand old man of British politics who turns 85 on Saturday, says the Russians "get away with anything," just like Adolph Hitler did 40 years ago.

In a BBC television interview to mark the start of his 86th year, the former prime minister expressed alarm on Tuesday night at the danger Soviet military power now poses to the West and at America's apparent weakness in meeting it.

Recalling his days as an aide to Prime Minister Winston Churchill during World War II, Macmillan said Churchill stopped worrying about the Germans in 1943 because he knew the war was already won and began thinking about the Russians.

But, Macmillan said, the Americans thought the Russians were "marvellous, perhaps better than effete Europeans like the British" and insisted on a second front in the West instead of Churchill's plan to go through the Balkans.

If that had been done, he said, "we'd have been 400km. east of where the iron curtain is now drawn."

The Russians, he said, seem to be able to get away with anything, "just like Hitler got away with anything."

"I tell you quite frankly," he said, "that I'm alarmed about the SALT discussions which look like abandoning or endangering the safety of Europe for the convenience of the U.S. and Russia."

Macmillan, still alert and active, has criticized American policies before. At an off-the-record dinner he was quoted as saying that the Carter administration represented "the weakest leadership in my lifetime."

World champ wins women's slalom

MARIBOR, Yugoslavia (AP). — Hanni Wenzel of Liechtenstein, the defending world cup champion, won the women's slalom here yesterday with a two-run time of 1 minute 32.71 seconds and closed within eight points of standings leader Annemarie Moser-Proell of Austria.

Mysterious fires on Venus

MOUNTAIN VIEW, California (AP). — Early findings from Pioneer Venus I and II show Venus' fierce atmosphere and surface include continuing lightning above and a glow from "mysterious chemical fires" below, scientists said on Wednesday.

The information was released from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Centre and came about two months after the Orbiter Venus I and five atmospheric probes called Venus II reached the planet.

The lightning, which scientists said flashed as often as 100 times in five minutes, was detected by the Orbiter which has remained above the Venusian surface. It apparently cannot be seen from the surface.

The glow was detected by two probes on the side of the planet facing away from the sun. Scientists called the glow mysterious and unexpected, and said it could come from "chemical fires" on the surface or in the very hot and dense lower atmosphere.

Scientists said other findings include:

- Venus' topography could be similar to Earth's, with mountain-like features and extensive flat areas.
- Ten chemicals in the atmosphere and 10 ions in the ionosphere have been identified by the spacecraft. The planet's atmosphere is made up primarily of carbon dioxide, with small percentages of nitrogen, helium, neon and argon.

MERAN. — Seldom has such a ky notion so fired the minds of lans as Ayatollah Ruhollah meini's plan for turning Iran into slamic republic.

artisans claim creation of such a blic would cure all Iran's ills, e the country a way station veen capitalism and com- ism; shift most decisions to the vidual and ensure a minimum of rnment intervention.

versaries fear the Shah's much- dictatorship is about to be aced by one run by the Moslem gy. Religious minorities, en, leftists, much of the ated, Westernized middle class have their reasons for fearing a any of the turbans.

these critics the idea of an mic republic conjures up visions amalgam of Islamic societies as Libya, Pakistan or Saudi lia, or thieves' hands severed, teresses stoned and journalists ped.

The Islamic republic's onents these three countries are e examples of what they do not for Iran.

t Mehdi Bazargan, a close meini aide who has tried to ernize Islamic thinking, sees no radiction in stating that his el is Islam as it existed during 10 years immediately after the of the Prophet Mohammed. was nearly 1,300 years ago.

SHARIATI, a university lec- who died in 1974, propounded theory that the Koran was a lutionary tract. His half- logical, half-idealistic views fired a whole generation of Ira- university students, and his ely socialist message has ived Marxism of many young uits here.

e reformers' goal, it has been is to take Islam from the dark ers of the mosque to the streets, s and classrooms, to implement daily life.

perts are now said to be hard at on various commissions trying efine exactly what the Islamic blic should be.

e problem is that merchants, workers, intellectuals and middle-class professionals all have views — and more often than not their collective views do not agree. Nor do the opinions of learned clerics writing on the subject converge.

There is even confusion about what Khomeini thinks. Increasingly, he is said to see himself as a revolutionary not just for Iran or the Islamic world, but for the world at large.

He is reported to have little use for his fellow clerics, considered too conservative and unwilling to share his revolutionary views.

He wants to keep them off his planned revolutionary council and provisional government.

Yet in a book published under his name several years ago, which Khomeini aides now say is being revised, he is quoted as saying, "The real governors are the theologians themselves, and thus the government must rightly belong to the theologians, not to those who, due to their ignorance of the (Islamic) law, must follow their guidance. They inherit directly from the Prophet and the imams the right of government over the people."

ANOTHER MOSLEM divine, Ayatollah Allameh Nuri, argues that any legislative body in any Islamic government cannot be considered independent, because "in Islam God is law-giver and legislator."

Some close Khomeini aides claim that an Islamic government structure would be even more democratic and open than Western systems of government.

Some want a unicameral legislature. Others forsee an upper house of clerics and religious-minded citizens who would act as the senior chamber and exert the kind of pervasive power enjoyed in England in the 15th century by the House of Lords and the bishops.

An elected lower house in theory would have only an advisory role but in reality would carry out most decisions.

These complications arise from the notion that the laws of Islamic societies have been "given" once and for all in the Koran and the Hadith, the compendium of Islamic theology and jurisprudence based on the Prophet's sayings.

On more practical matters, specialists claim to discern policies on economics and legal and social codes.

Wealth, according to these policies, should be equally distributed even to the point of paying everyone to same wages regardless of the job performed — a goal that undoubtedly would take some time to achieve. Interest on loans would be abolished. Banks would make money on profits from investments.

Arguments continue between the socialist-minded proponents of nationalization and laissez-faire capitalists who favour private property. In any case, no present holdings seem to be in jeopardy.

LEGAL AND social codes are the greatest cause of controversy. Depending on which specialist is talking, the Sharia, or rigid Moslem code of law, will or will not be enforced. That law, in theory, includes severing hands for some forms of theft, stoning adulteresses and whipping those who drink alcoholic beverages.

At the very least, all laws on the books, as well as future bills, would be reviewed to ensure that they are not a threat to public morals.

In any case, most bars, nightclubs, liquor stores and movie theaters have been burned by militant Moslems, who have also put the torch to breweries and to Teheran's notorious red-light district.

Khomeini, in interviews, has done little to allay the fears of censorship when he made the exercise of freedom of speech, press and assembly conditional on the otherwise undefined "national interest."

Film, theatre, radio and television must serve Islamic goals, he has said, and dance halls are sinful. Ayatollah Nuri has talked of an "era of purification."

Still, as eminent a specialist as Ayatollah Mahmoud Taleghani insists that women would have full rights to work, property and divorce.

Many Westernized women, however, find little joy in feeling obliged to don the full-length gown covering their bodies from head to toes to avoid dirty looks or worse on the streets.

Taleghani said "women can even breast-feed their babies, exact payment from their husbands for housekeeping and join the political struggle."

But, he said, "there are certain constraints on women exercising political leadership."

A woman could become a cabinet minister, but only if no competent man were available, he said.

"Organic differences" between men and women are such that Islam had given men more responsibility in running society, he said, "and given women more responsibility in the formation of future societies."

As for corporal punishment laid down under Islamic law, he said that "at the time of the Prophet," a 10-year period, "only one or two hands had to be cut off for theft," because the deterrent was credible.

Storm of controversy unsettles the Germans

By STEPHEN LAUFER
Special to The Jerusalem Post

BERLIN. — Sixteen million West Germans saw the last part of the American television series "Holocaust" on January 26. Viewing figures had grown throughout the week from 30 per cent of all viewers for the first part of the series to a record-breaking 41 per cent for the last, as it increasingly became the central talking point throughout the country.

Media scientists at the Technical University in West Berlin who have been working on a wide-ranging project on anti-Semitism in the media for two years, watched and discussed "Holocaust" with nine different groups. Included were members of youth clubs, trade unions, right- and left-wing groups, young Jews, and pensioners.

The energy and emotion which was released in the discussions reflected the heatedness of the debate in the population as a whole. They were a result not only of the vividness and explicitness of the film, but of a great need among West Germans of all ages to discuss the Nazi period.

OLDER PEOPLE who experienced the Nazi regime as teenagers or adults felt themselves put under pressure by "Holocaust" to justify their actions or their failure to act.

A 67-year-old pediatric nurse spoke for many when she said, "the disappearance of unemployment was an important point." A 70-year-old doctor felt it insufficient to say that "there were a number of positive things" about the Nazis. She also claimed that the kind of euthenasia programme of which Anna Weiss was a victim in the film "never existed."

A former Wehrmacht officer claimed to have "fought for freedom and our families and our nation," and said that when he got to Poland "at the head of the first wave, we found the Jews hanging from the trees, before a single German had been there."

The old soldier was echoed by a young Christian Democrat who said, "I think we would also be prepared to do things like the concentration camp guards. We only have to be motivated properly, in the name of freedom."

Although the young trade unionists and Social Democrats also felt that "this SS-man Dorf was a fundamentally normal person because he had the German virtues of conscientiousness and careerism," they criticized the film for its failure to show the historical tradition from which they come. They were also disappointed when labour opposition to the Nazis failed to be mentioned.

An 18-year-old Social Democrat warned that "it is dangerous to depict fascism solely through the persecution of the Jews, because many people will only recognize fascism again when the Jews are being persecuted."

THE POLITICALLY active young people, asked if "Holocaust" could at least contribute partially to a demystification of the Nazi period in West Germany, replied in the negative. "I found that the Jews in the film were portrayed exactly as they were by the Hitler regime. Small and mean, stupid," said one girl.

An electrician supported her, saying the film concentrated on "a doctor's family, a privileged family, as if all Jews were so privileged."

The feeling that old cliches had survived in the film had earlier been confirmed by a production assistant involved in filming the Warsaw Ghetto scenes in West Berlin. She reported that Turkish labourers had been hired as extras because of their large noses, swarthy complexions and dark eyes.

That cliches and prejudices still exist amongst young people became clear in the discussions with school students. One schoolboy reported that he had mentioned in a discussion at school that he was half Jewish. "They called me dirty Yid for fun. We laughed. But now I don't know."

Another boy said that his schoolmates had begun drawing swastikas and playing at "concentration camp guards." "They use phrases like 'The Jews have to be exterminated' all the time."

The Nazi period is only dealt with very late in the schools. Teachers whose syllabus prescribes the topic often don't manage or don't want to get beyond the last Kaiser. "What goes on in the schools is a catastrophe, so little is taught, and so late," said a worried teacher.

"The film is good for those who don't know anything about the time. Teachers could take this as a basis to do more about the problem, with books and discussions," said a member of the Jewish Students' Federation in West Berlin.

She was supported by other members of the Federation who, although they had many criticisms of "Holocaust", were relieved that a discussion had finally unfolded in West Germany. "Even though it doesn't show the humanity of the Jews, but rather looks favourably at the SS-man's struggle with his conscience," said a 23-year-old student, "the film is a very good beginning for young people to inform themselves about this period."

The chairman of the Jewish Community in West Berlin, Heinz Galinski, welcomed the broadcast. "We don't want to make the over 50 per cent of the population who were born after 1945 responsible for what happened," he said, "but they are responsible for the future, a future free of prejudice and the rule of base instincts."

"Holocaust" has certainly caused a storm in Germany. The question remains as to whether it has been "the beginning," as Galinski says, "of a period of reflection" and of searching for the causes of the Holocaust, or whether it has provided many with an alibi, making it possible for them to confess with relief their helplessness before the forces of history.

Unready Britain

By PATRICK O'DONOVAN
Observer Foreign News Service

LONDON. — Britain must be the most unprepared country in the world. This may be due to the comparative luxury of its history, but the fact remains that almost everything takes it by surprise.

It has been ferociously surprised by Ireland roughly once every generation since the 11th century. It is surprised by war, industrial unrest, strikes, by the discovery of poverty and the fact that early 19th century sewers, though beautiful in a weird way, are inadequate for modern needs. Above all it is surprised by the weather.

The last is surprising since the British devote a great deal of time and etiquette to talking about the weather. In some civilizations, when you meet an acquaintance you call down the blessings of God or wish him peace or a multitue of camels. In England you exchange formal comments like "Foul day, isn't it?" or, more rarely, "What a perfect day!"

This is odd because most of Britain has a singularly equable and mild climate, seldom going to extremes. But for several weeks the country has been tormented by some snow, a good deal of ice on the roads, some blocked passes over the bleaker northern moors and the freezing-up of cars, water pipes and oil tanks for central heating.

The very proper and democratic reaction of the British has been to express astonishment at this Act of God, who does it about once every 12 years in a really determined way — and to blame the government and the local authorities for being taken by surprise.

THE PROBLEMS that come from such natural disasters have been slightly alleviated by the fact that there are an exceptionally large number of strikes which means that fewer people have wanted to get to work anyway. Of course, executives and commuters from dormitory towns for the offices of the great cities seldom belong to unions and seldom strike, but this affords very little comfort.

The fact remains that the massive armoury of anti-snow and ice machinery kept by a city like, say, Chicago, would seem excessive in a country like this. Chicago has a winter of such regular ferocity that a similar experience would knock London dead. In British terms, Chicago is not a viable proposition.

And in ordinary times, say a month from now, the executive commuter caught in a traffic jam 30kms. long going into London and now cursing his rulers' lack of foresight, would be similarly incensed by the taxation necessary to provide an effective stand-by system for Britain's rare disasters. The fact is that in Britain, governments cannot win — even after a victorious war.

The real blame lies with the British people who show all the charming qualities of the foolish virgins and none of the selfish and pragmatic vulgarity of the wise ones.

Year after year they are astonished when their water pipes freeze and burst.

A FEW PEOPLE have been killed, largely because of their conviction that nothing really unpleasant or utterly unusual could happen to them in so moderate a country. More worrying is the case of old people who quietly die alone, of hypothermia. No figures exist for this private form of death.

Their case is made worse by the fact that in some areas the social service visitors have been on strike and many of the old and lonely are too proud or too cantankerous to ask people for help and in British cities it is regarded as unneighbourly officiously to interfere.

There may be some virtue in this unpreparedness. In almost any other country, the nation would be judged to be in a pre-revolutionary situation, with the unions rejecting a Labour government and with much of industry — the docks for example — in the hands of small, ad hoc committees, who tend to be in incoherent rage over their wrongs.

But no one really believes in a revolution and this stolid inertia is probably the best defence against it that exists, better far than frantic counter-preparations.

A DETERMINED REMNANT

By CHARLOTTE KAHANE/Special to The Jerusalem Post

ALTHOUGH Dubrovnik is better-known for its medieval bastions, treasures and the unique plaza under the open sky, the Yugoslav city gives visitors a chance to view a remarkable collection of Jewish monuments and the third oldest synagogue in Europe.

Squeezed among ordinary buildings in Ulica Zudioska, the synagogue is an extraordinary construction. External unity with surrounding houses was required when it was built in the 14th century.

The blue ceiling, with its gold stars, helps to create an impression of openness that extends to the women's gallery at the rear. A hundred years ago, the women had to sit in the adjoining building, which was then — as it is now — the home of the Tolentino family.

The focal point in the Dubrovnik synagogue is the delicately-carved bima, with its spiral wooden columns which hold the Tora brought by exiled Sephardi Jews.

But if this oblong, dark-wood-panelled room with its antique Florentine candelabra bears witness to the continuity of Jewish life, nothing could be more impressive than the grand total of its congregation — 16.

The Jewish community, which once had 200 members now has only 10 women and six men aged between 60 and 70-plus, notes Rabbi Menahem Tolentino.

Although the rabbi is concerned with having a minyan, which is possible only when tourists attend, he is determined to hold services every Friday "even if there is no minyan."

LIKE HIS father, who was Chief Rabbi of Dubrovnik for 63 years (1848-1911), the present rabbi is the spiritual leader, as well as the ritual slaughterer, president, cantor and synagogue cleaner of the tiny community.

Local gentiles refer to the tall, stately rabbi as "the nobleman," and everyone who meets the descendant of Dubrovnik's oldest Jewish family cannot fail to be impressed by the aptness of that description. (The first members of the Tolentino family arrived from Spain 650 years ago.)

The rabbi, 86, speaks idiomatic German (but not English). He is smooth-shaven, has a remarkably young-sounding voice and is a man of enormous presence. (He is also a man of deep suspicion: The first thing I learned was that press credentials carried far less weight with him than being the wife of a Cohen.)

Once inside his office, one is confronted by a magnificent collection of Baroque furniture, impressive not only for its cash value but also for its historical value.

And there were several items of Jewish interest on display.

Mounted on one wall was a letter from Sir Moses Montefiore — a reply to a congratulatory message sent by the Dubrovnik Jewish community on Sir Moses' 100th birthday.

Side by side in frail frames were two lists of names — one containing the names of 39 Jews who died in Dubrovnik's earthquake in 1870; the other, containing the names of Dubrovnik Jews who died in Auschwitz in World War II.

Of the 75,000 Jews who lived in Yugoslavia before the war, 60,000 were killed either in concentration camps or while fighting with the partisans.

All members of the Tolentino family — eight brothers and four sisters — were sent to Auschwitz. Two brothers and a sister survived.

Not all the community's sacred objects were lost to Nazi plunderers. The Tolentinos buried the Tora scrolls before they were arrested, and many synagogue items, such as the superbly embroidered tapestries and ornamental silver were saved by the Tolentino family and their non-Jewish friends.

Among them is a brilliantly coloured 13th-century Moorish carpet (used for the ark), which is said to have been a gift from Queen Isabella to her Jewish physician when he was forced to leave Spain.

ONLY NINE Jews returned to Dubrovnik in the early post-World War II years.

Rabbi Tolentino, who spent four years at Auschwitz, brought back the remains of many members of his congregation to Dubrovnik's Jewish cemetery.

The small, terraced cemetery with its tall cypress trees, is 300-years old and is still well tended. Many of the old tombstones contain inlaid decorations of a crown representing the badge worn by Spanish Jews in exile.

There is evidence that the synagogue had been "granted" to the chief rabbi in 711 by the Moorish conquerors and marked the calm, prosperous period which followed.

But complete equality was not granted to Dubrovnik Jews until the arrival of the French troops in 1806. After that, flourishing commerce normalised the life of the Jews in this part of Europe until the Nazi occupation.

Today, according to Rabbi Tolentino, the handful of surviving Jews once again enjoy "full equality and religious freedom, as do the denominations in Yugoslavia."

One of the most striking examples of that freedom includes a map of modern Israel, a JNF Blue Box and a picture of Jerusalem — all openly displayed alongside a portrait of Herzl.

From Andy's scrapbook...

By SRAYA SHAPIRO
Jerusalem Post Reporter

DAVID "ANDY" ELDAN must have left a small piece of his heart among the 200,000 neatly filed photographs, which record Israel's first 30 years, in the Government Press Office. For Andy recently retired after heading the photographic department during those eventful years.

"We tried to keep a record of events in all fields — political, economic, artistic. And of Israel's wars, of course," he says.

Andy came to Palestine in the final year of his medical studies. In his home town of Vienna he had been active in the Blau-Weiss Zionist movement, and the young man saw no reason to stay in Austria any longer.

He worked on a kibbutz before getting a job in water prospecting. Then, in 1936, he returned to Vienna to attend his ailing father, returning to Palestine two years later.

When World War II broke out, he joined the Royal Air Force.

"Like all the boys, I had a camera, an Ernemann 4½ by 6, which was a heavy gadget. But it was in the RAF 'Victory Club' in Egypt that I really learned to handle cameras and chemicals more expertly.

The hobby created connections. The young corporal was admitted to the sharpshooters' team, composed mostly of ranking officers, which competed against King Farouk's men — and won.

When he was demobbed, Andy opened a photographic studio in a neighbourhood then populated almost exclusively by German immigrants.

But Israel's War of Independence soon put an end to studio photography. Andy served in Sgan-Aluf Moshe Perlman's Army Press Unit and was assigned to accompany foreign journalists. Of course, he took his own camera along when he went on assignments.

When the war ended, he was transferred to the press information department of the Prime Minister's Office, where he was put in charge of the photographic department.

How did he become known as "Andy?" Quite simply. His family name in Vienna was Anderman.

"The name 'David Eldan' was suggested by Moshe Sharett, whom I accompanied to Aden in 1949 to greet the Magic Carpet operation. At our breakfast table, Sharett would cover paper napkins with suggestions of names."

Nevertheless, David Eldan remains known to the many local and foreign professional photojournalists simply as "Andy."

Salute to a friend

By ERIC GOTTGETREU/Special to The Jerusalem Post

RUDOLF KUESTERMEIER, the German journalist in whose name a grove is to be dedicated in the Keren Kayemet forest near Modi'in on Friday, was the first non-Jewish German to be given a visa to Israel. He richly deserved the honour.

Kuestermeier, who died in Tel Aviv in 1977, was buried in the Hamburg-Ohlsdorf cemetery in a special "Section of Honour" for Germans prominent in the fight against Nazism. Since he did not retire from the struggle after Hitler's downfall but dedicated himself to the achievement of a moral and material redress for Nazi crimes against the Jewish people, it is only fitting that his memory should be honoured in Israel, too. It is for this reason that his many friends here and abroad have collected a considerable amount for a grove in his name.

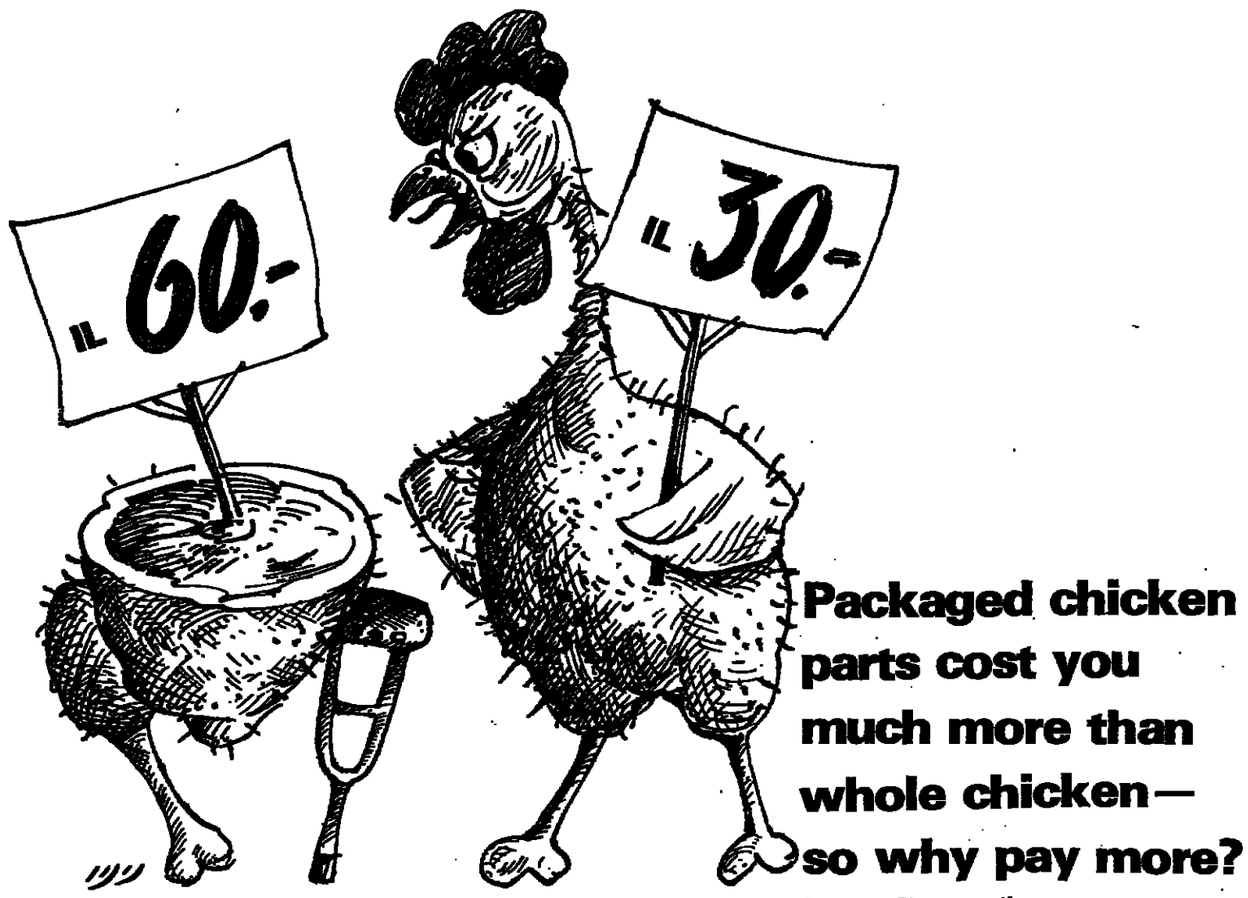
Kuestermeier, born in February 1903, was the son of a Westphalian labourer. As a student in the 1920s, he began his career as a journalist and soon earned a reputation as a fierce opponent of fascism. It was this dedication which would earn him 10 years' imprisonment at Luckau, and additional incarceration at Bergen-Belsen.

AFTER THE WAR, Kuestermeier visited Israel before any other newsman from Germany, and it was through his series of 18 feature articles in "Die Welt" that many Germans for the first time got a detailed objective report on the new Jewish State.

A few months after his return from Israel, Kuestermeier started a still less important action for Israel-German rapprochement. Together with his journalist friend Erich Lueth of Hamburg, he opened a large-scale German press and radio campaign for "Peace with Israel."

In all those years of fostering understanding between the new generations of Germans and Israelis, Kuestermeier never ceased to be a helpful and loyal element.

In 1957, after his retirement from the editorship of "Die Welt," he settled in Israel permanently as the first correspondent here of the "Deutsche Presse-Agentur, DPA" and later worked as correspondent for German radio stations. In 1961 he was awarded the German-sponsored Theodor Wolff prize for his outstanding reports on the trial of Adolf Eichmann.



Packaged chicken parts cost you much more than whole chicken — so why pay more?

In everyday life, you know that a complete article is worth more. It seems the poultry merchants have learned to reckon differently: how else can one understand why the same chicken, costing about IL30, is priced at about IL60 when cut and packaged as chicken parts.

Before you put a package of legs, breast or stomachs into your shopping cart, work it out. It is worth your while to take a whole chicken, and not pay double for chicken parts.

Before you buy, compare prices. Check them weight for weight, and look for good but cheaper alternatives. You don't find anything? Don't buy, or buy later. Only thus can we bring down prices for the benefit of all, only thus can we conquer inflation.

FEELING THE BITE

PUBLIC FACES
Mark Segal

INFLATION is not only eating into their pockets but into Herut's traditional proletarian constituency, according to Modi'in Ha'ezrahi's end-January public opinion survey. The institute pollster Dr. Misa Zemach reports a radical shift among the mass of Likud supporters away from their usual party. So far they remain politically homeless, constituting much of the 30 per cent "undecided/don't know" respondents. Though the floating vote remains stable, its social composition has changed, with disenchanted middle-class DMC voters reverting to pre-1977 patterns: two-thirds to Labour and one-third to the Likud.

Interestingly, 28.7 per cent claim that their living standards have declined over the past two years — affected Likud voters are in this category).

Dr. Zemach, whose credibility as an accurate pollster was built up during the June 1977 Histadrut polls and last November's local elections, reports a narrowing gap between the Likud (43 mandates, down from 46) and the Labour Alignment (38, up from 33), with the religious parties throughout the same. The resultant increase in the latter's bargaining power has inspired some members of the National Religious Party to attempt to win the support of the uncommitted lower-income voters. Religious Affairs Minister Aharon Rakhatzeira and party secretary-general Danny Vermus are especially interested in pursuing this line. Their novel strategic concept of the NRP as an alternative government party, and not just as a weather-vane coalition partner, has even brought feelers from Assaf Yaguri MK (Ya'ad) and Yigal Hurvitz MK (La'am-Likud) regarding a future alignment.

THE PUBLICATION in two months' time of Yitzhak Rabin's biography hangs like a storm-laden cloud over the Labour Party. They fear that his version of events during his government, especially the Cabinet decisions concerning the Entebbe rescue mission, may reopen all the old wounds created by the bitter struggle for the leadership with party chairman Shimon Peres, whose supporters can hardly be expected to remain silent.

The former premier was in a cheerful mood when I met him last week just before he left for Switzerland on a 10-day speaking engagement. He confirmed that the biography should come out sometime in March.

AN INFORMAL poll among newsmen would easily demonstrate that the most popular member of Premier Menahem Begin's administration is his personal aide and bureau chief, Yehiel Kadishai. He certainly livened up the long flight to and from Oslo with his first-class collection of Yiddish jokes. They helped to win him friends among the aides of King Olav V during his stay with the Begins at the Royal Palace. Kadishai was astonished to learn from his new friends, when telling them about the Land of Milk and Honey, that they had never tasted the latter. So on his return he bought four jars of pure honey from Kibbutz Shamir's hives, and sent them to the Royal Palace.

THE APPEARANCE of pictures in newspapers last week showing Agriculture Minister Arik Sharon as the guest of Defence Minister Ezer Weizman at a military exercise, provoked speculation that the two old soldiers, famous for their slanging matches in and out of the Cabinet room, were making it up. After all, the prime minister's favourite war hero ("mon general") and Weizman are known to hold sharply divergent views on the peace process with Egypt. Pundits are asking: Is it bad or good news for the peace talks? Is it aimed against Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan? How long will it last?

AS HISTADRUT Secretary-General Yeroham Meshel and his colleagues mount their campaign against Health Minister Eliezer Shostak's scheme to nationalize the sick funds, Histadrut officials do not fail to mention Shostak's conflict of interest. He remains the boss of the Leumi labour organization, with its prosperous sick fund, which — unlike their Kupat Holim — has few outside eyes peering into its administration. They also note that Shostak's two closest lieutenants, David Yotan and David Melamdowicz have for years been top figures in health services in Tel Aviv and Ramat Gan, respectively.

FINANCE MINISTER Simha Ehrlich made an interesting and earthy political point in his recent "Ma'ariv" interview with Yair Kotler, saying that "the difference between being in the opposition and being in power may be compared to that between eating matza before Passover and sleeping with one's fiancée before marriage. Both are forbidden, but there is a decided distinction between them."

WORLD WIZO chairman Raya Jaglom recently learned that the personal touch does pay. She took some of the womenfolk of Iranian Jewish families waiting out things in luxury hotels here on a tour of WIZO children's institutions in Tel Aviv. Not only were they delighted that someone was taking an interest in them, but they were also impressed by WIZO's work. The result: IL15,000 for the organization's fund drive.

BEIT BERL, the Labour Party college, not only increased its prestige and knowledge by hosting the three lectures of Prof. John Kenneth Galbraith, but also enriched its library, thanks to a donation of IL30,000 for its economics and social sciences section from the American savant.

THE ISRAELI pop music scene will soon be enlivened by the visit of pop super Elton John, who is a good friend of singer Yigal Bashan (son-in-law of Ya'acov Meridor, who was a founding member of Begin's "fighting family"). One expects John, chairman of the Watford football club, to "adopt" a Betar football team.

KNESSET MEMBER Yossi Sarid should not be over-hasty in requesting his apology letters back from various friends and writers over his parliamentary question in 1976 concerning author Benjamin Tammuz's side-activities during his spell as Israel's cultural attaché in London. A member of the Tammuz family has kindly corrected for us part of an earlier report in this column, informing us that Tammuz went to Britain on a scholarship and plans to come back in a year's time. The writer is at the Oxford University Centre for post-graduate Hebrew studies, where he was preceded by such Israeli literati as Aharon Appelfeld, Amos Oz, Aharon Meged and Dalia Rabikovitch.

MRS. THEA ELLIOTT, widow of the late British Ambassador to Israel, is coming here next week to attend the dedication ceremony of a Kiryat Gat community centre in memory of her late husband, John, who drowned off Caesarea shortly after starting his term of duty in this country. The project has been sponsored by the Child Re-Settlement Fund of Great Britain and Ireland.

EZER WEIZMAN once said El Al stood for "Every Landing A Late One," and the family of Jewish Agency chairman Arye Dulzin think so too. Last November they waited in vain on a Friday for El Al flights 010 and 016 to arrive from New York. Fellow mourners did disembark but not the casket containing the remains of their father, Abraham, a leader of Mexican Jewry, which left Mexico City on board the same Aeromexico flight for New York as the mourners. The funeral had to be postponed a day or two until the coffin reached Israel.

An angry complaint to El Al elicited a slithery reply from airline chief Mordechai Hod. Perusal of the subsequent correspondence between Hod, Dulzin and Agency director-general Shmuel Lahis indicates that an El Al cargo supervisor at Kennedy Airport refused to accept the casket because it was Thanksgiving Day, and the El Al station was understaffed. So the mourning party changed planes, while the coffin stayed behind. Most bizarre was the passage in Hod's letter (November 26) where he wrote: "El Al flight 010 carried two caskets, which confused the personnel involved . . ." Where was the station manager or his deputy?

THE RESOURCEFUL owner of the Turel Gallery in Tel Aviv, Yitzhak Turel, is doing nicely out of the peace process, having this week made front page news along with artist Sammy Steinowitz through their fortuitous meeting with President Anwar Sadat at one of his country homes.

Turel describes Steinowitz as an Israeli artist, though his links with Israel have been tenuous in recent years. They both popped up in Oslo for the Nobel Peace Prize ceremony, booking into the Scandinavia Hotel alongside the Israeli and Egyptian contingents. The press gave elaborate publicity to Steinowitz's peace painting series. The duo persuaded Oslo Jewry to buy one painting which was presented before the world's TV cameras to Premier Begin. Turel's next stop — he announced — is the White House. And after that, the Vatican.

Portion of the Week: Beshallah Exodus 13:17 — 18:15.
Verse discussed is 15:27.

THIS COLUMN ON November 10 was devoted to the implications of religious place names and mentioned denominations in Israel. Hazezon Tamar, a palm, and, as the column then stated, the place obviously was so called because of the palm trees that flourished there, as Jericho is called "The City of Palms" (Deut. 24:3). The first actual reference to the stately palm is in this week's portion.

The children of Israel came to a place where the water was so saline as to be undrinkable, and they gave it the name Marah (bitterness). Then they came to Elim, where there were 12 springs of water and 70 palm trees, and they encamped there by the waters.

This site has been identified with a place in Sinai, called today Ain Mussa (the well of Moses). The 12 springs are still there; the 70 palms of Exodus have multiplied to thousands.

THERE IS another mention of the palm in the scriptural reading for this Sabbath. Since the pentateuchal portion is dominated by the Song of Moses, the haftara selected is the Song of Deborah. That haftara opens with the words, "Now Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth judged Israel at that time. And she sat under the palm tree of Deborah" (Judges 4:4).

The midrash gives a delightful explanation of why she sat there. The name "Lapidoth" means "torches," and it maintains that, unlike his wife, Lapidoth was an ignoramus who made his living by manufacturing candles for the Temple. In order to sell them, he was frequently away from home. Though it may be that in principle "a woman's place is at home," it was not so when the lady of the house left alone. Out of chasteness and to avoid gossip, Deborah decided to sit, when her husband was away, under a palm, in the open. Consequently, the palm was called "The Palm of Deborah," and "there she taught Tora."

'Point of identity' for UK Jewry

LONDON LETTER
Hyam Corney

LONDON. — Synagogue membership in Britain is on the wane.

That is one of the conclusions in a survey published here recently by the research unit of the Board of Deputies of British Jews.

A booklet entitled "Synagogue Affiliation in the United Kingdom" points to a six per cent decline in membership between 1970 and 1977 and to a reduction in the number of synagogues from 345 to 315.

But the authors of the publication, Dr. Barry Kosmin and his assistant Deborah de Lange, do not believe that these statistics necessarily mean that the community is shrinking. Most of the synagogues which have lost members, they point out, are in the London area, with synagogues in the surrounding counties gaining members. Some of the decline, they believe, is also due to the ending of "multiple memberships" (people belonging to more than one synagogue) as a reaction to rapidly increasing synagogue fees during the 1970s.

Despite the drop in numbers, the survey reveals that there are still over 111,000 members of synagogues in Britain.

"Membership of a synagogue," the authors write in their introduction, "is still the most widely held point of identity for British Jews. All contemporary studies in this country have shown that synagogue membership covers around two-thirds of identifying Jews." The booklet does not include an estimate of the Jewish population of Britain but on the basis of the evidence provided, the current estimate of just under 400,000 is probably still accurate.

One other interesting conclusion of the survey: The "central Orthodox" grouping would appear to be losing out to the ultra-Orthodox and the Progressives. The latter now account for over 20 per cent of Anglo-Jewish synagogue membership. The ultra-Orthodox, though their percentage has gone up, is still only 3.5.

AS BRITAIN struggles through its second week of strikes — trains, lorry drivers, public service employees, school caretakers, ambulancemen, etc. those responsible for importing Israeli produce into the country are devising ways of overcoming the difficulties.

Yossi Rosen, manager of Agrexco in the UK, tells me that sales have been reduced by 30 per cent because of the dock strike. But the loss would have been much higher had they not "managed to find ways of reaching our suppliers direct" — ways that he did not want to elaborate for fear of them being stopped.

Painful path towards unity

CHRISTIAN COMMENT
Oikoumenikos

"FORGIVE US for our rejection of our brothers and sisters, Lord, and heal our divisions...." Thus prayed a group of Christians from many different backgrounds during the recent Week of Prayer for Christian Unity in Jerusalem.

Many sensitive Christians are deeply pained by the long and tragic history of relations between their various traditions that has led so often to bloodshed and mutual excommunication. This special Week of Prayer gave opportunity for many to join in acts of repentance and seek new levels of understanding and appreciation.

The Week began with a musical programme at Schmidt Girl's College near Damascus Gate. Despite the cold, rainy weather, about 500 Christians gathered to hear choirs, soloists, and instrumentalists present selections with both a Christian and an ethnic flavour. Languages included Arabic, French, English, Armenian, German, and Italian — a small window into the diversity of the Christian communities in Jerusalem.

One group of singers was from the Mary Lovell Home for the Blind in Beit Hanita. At the close, bishops, priests, pastors, brothers and sisters and lay people all joined hands and sang an encore from the Collège des Frères' Choir's programme: "We are one in the Spirit, we are one in the Lord....they'll know we are Christians by our love." The latter phrase became a prayer for many, and was re-echoed in song during the week at another gathering, in the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer.

Most of the meetings during the week were held in various parishes where participants had the opportunity to pray in many languages with Christians of other traditions. Translations were almost always available in Arabic and English, and sometimes in other languages. The late-afternoon vesper services were held in churches in the Old City, in the Ethiopian Orthodox Church off Prophets Street, in the Cenacle or "Upper Room" on what is today called Mount Zion, and in St. George's Cathedral.

The service in the Cenacle was held near or on the spot where early Christians gathered for 10 days of unified prayer following their Lord's ascension. Hebrew, English, Arabic, Greek, Armenian, and French were used in the service. The theme of reconciliation was highlighted; worshippers offered each other bread and salt as a symbol of this in the ancient Biblical tradition.

Those who saw the ceremony briefly in the Mabat news programme may have felt that the participants were unusually solemn — a distinct contrast to the joyous celebration of the musical evening which began the week. Undoubtedly, the memory of the bitter divisions which have characterized the Christian communities, in contrast to that early unity in prayer, was cause for reflection and repentance for many. The climax of the service was the annual visit to the adjoining Chapel of the Holy Spirit, led by Father Bargil Pixner.

The Week of Prayer was meant to encourage local Christians to recognize and affirm those who have expressed their faith in a common Lord. One enemy of unity is ignorance. In Jerusalem, the high walls that so frequently enclose one community or another may be equally symbolic of a deeper level of separation. Some Christians found themselves worshipping for the first time with those of an Armenian, Ethiopian, Anglican, Lutheran, Greek Orthodox, or Latin tradition. They discovered common ground in the reading of Scriptures that all hold dear, and in the common prayer (the Lord's Prayer, or more properly, the Disciples' Prayer which Jesus taught), which was heard in many settings and languages during the week. Getting to know one another, discovering areas of commonality, and praying for unity were among the clear values of the week's experience.

WHAT KIND OF UNITY is really sought? Most Jerusalem Christians are not interested in some kind of super-church under one organizational roof. There can be something very beautiful in the mosaic of traditions from which the different Christian communities have come. The varied styles of worship — some of which are very ancient — and the languages which reflect the different ethnic groups who have come to faith, can be complementary rather than opposed to each other.

Some Arab Christians believe that there is a special kind of unity which is already being created by the work of the Holy Spirit, which transcends the man made divisions of past centuries. This unity is expressed in prayer groups where people gather in homes or in small meeting halls to sing praise to God, to pray for one another and particular needs, and to support each other with concern and acts of kindness.

One such group in Bethlehem includes Christians from Greek Orthodox, Syrian Orthodox, Greek and Latin Catholic, and Lutheran traditions. "This is the real avenue for unity," asserted one Arab leader this week. "We have found each other as brothers and sisters in the Lord. We are united in praise to God and in love for each other."

There are other prayer groups in Jerusalem and Bethlehem in which the dominant language may be Hebrew, English, or French. The participants come from various churches, and they almost always remain faithful to their own traditions. What attracts them to these prayer groups? Many reply: the freedom to praise God in contemporary melody; the evidence of the presence and power of God's Spirit; and the spontaneous prayer for specific situations of need (such as prayer for healing). For them, these are not to be relegated to past history; they may be experienced now.

One of the best known English-speaking groups in Jerusalem meets weekly at the Sisters of Zion on the Via Dolorosa. Protestants and Catholics share in leadership of the group, and visitors often remark that if the unity they see in that group, despite its diversity, could somehow be shared throughout the world, Christians would be known by their love for one another.

THEOLOGICAL DIFFERENCES do exist, of course, and these should not be masked or lightly dismissed. Because of the deep cleavage between Christians created by doctrinal differences enunciated by Church Councils centuries ago, the search for common ground is often a long and painful one.

An encouraging report on what is happening through the World Council of Churches' Faith and Order Commission was presented by Fr. F. Bouwen, P.B. Three specific areas in which theological consultation has been taking place over the past 12 years are: baptism, the Eucharist (or Communion, Mass, of the Lord's Supper), and ministry.

By producing documents, which have been submitted and resubmitted to member churches for criticism and re-statement, the commission has been seeking sufficient common accord doctrinally to permit anyone to share the Eucharist or Communion together. Since that is the central act of worship for most Christians, and because it involves mutual recognition of baptism and of each other's spiritual leaders in the celebration of the Eucharist, the search for common ground here is of crucial importance. It is significant that this WCC commission is the only one which has Protestants, Orthodox, and Catholics as full members, although the latter are not participating as "official" representatives of the Vatican.

The document on baptism which was issued from the commission's meeting in Bangalore, India, last August, is now being studied by members of the Ecumenical Circle of Friends in Jerusalem. The degree of mutual acceptance in the group already gives promise of wider benefits for relations between Christians in Jerusalem.

One place where theological research and a common life of prayer continue on an on-going basis is the Ecumenical Institute at Tantur, Jerusalem. Here Catholics and Protestants — this year from 11 different denominations — live in community, share the fruit of their theological and Biblical research, and participate in daily praise and worship. This goes beyond the occasional meeting or consultation, and highlights in both written and practical ways the areas of agreement and the challenging frontiers of unresolved division confronting Christians today.

No one is minimizing the tragedy of past Christian differences and even hostilities. However, there are hopeful signs, as shown by the hundreds who shared in the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, by dynamic prayer groups, and by continuing research. And some are committed, in the words of John XXIII, "to pray, to work, and to suffer for the unity of the Church."

An example of selfless devotion

THE JEWISH PEOPLE suffered a considerable loss with the passing of Sarah Feder Keyfitz one month and just a month after the death of her former Milwaukee compatriot and fellow Labour Zionist Golda Meir.

Like her good friend Mrs. Meir, Sarah Keyfitz was an idealist dedicated to her Jewish heritage and to the cause of Israel. After years of service in the Pioneer Women-Na'amat in the United States, including the national presidency from 1951 to 1954, she settled with her family to Israel.

The Keyfitzes settled in Jerusalem where they joined the faculty of the American College teaching there until it closed its doors. Sarah devoted herself to Jerusalem's English-speaking branch of Pioneer Women, organized the Israel Council of Pioneer Women and became its first chairman. A life member of the AACI and a founding member of the Labour Zionist Forum of America and Canada, she was at the same time the moving spirit in the Yiddish Cultural Foundation.

One of her most significant achievements was the establishment of the Adult Education Centre five years ago of which she was the dean and to which he attracted a very distinguished faculty. Today this study centre is part of the University Amamit of Jerusalem.

She set an example of selfless devotion and generosity.

Child benefits

TELEREVIEW/Philip Gillon

E BIBLE contains many sages lauding the glories of fruc- ation and multiplication. Apart n the promise to Abraham that seed would be as difficult to ber as the stars in the heaven, e is that noble Psalm in praise of e families: "As arrows are in the d of a mighty man; so are dren of the youth. Happy is the that hath his quiver full of n."

ese blessings are being taken seriously in a proposed new which will give the spiritual efits of having many sons and ghters practical backing in the n of income tax concessions, ional Insurance stipends, hous- priorities and other such spurs to eased productivity in the marital chamber. Amiram Harlap ared on "Law of the Day" to ex- nd the beauties of the proposed He explained that it has two ob- ives: to help large families ady in existence, and to en- age other Jewish families to do r hit for their country.

ote the qualifying adjective ch Mr. Harlap used — "Jewish" ilies. The Lord's promise to aham about the vastness of his reny apparently applied equally he children of Sarah and to the dren of Hagar, but the proposed does not adopt the same ap- ach. In fact, the descendants of ar have far outstripped the endants of Sarah in fruitfulness. rlap produced an expert on nography, Dr. Amnon Sofer, to e our blood run cold by showing the Arabs are beating the Jews ds down in the filing of cradles. ence the proposed law, obviously ned by ardent Jewish patriots, tains the curious proviso that its efits should be enjoyed only by ilies in which there are more n three children, with at least one d in the Israel Defence Forces or ome form of national service. At first sight, one might interpret this marital provision as being aimed at those Orthodox families which deny their sons and daughters the opportunity to serve their country in the army or in some similar fashion. Among Jews, it is generally the Orthodox Jews who oppose contraception, so they are liable to be affected by the limitation of benefits.

But the debate on "Law of the day" made it clear that the proviso is aimed at the Arabs, who, as Sofer said, are multiplying, even without the encouragement of any side benefits. An Arab journalist added that the law would show racial prejudice unworthy of a state dedicated to the principle of equality. He added that another law keeps Arabs out of the Israel Defence Forces, so, even if they should want to multiply and enlist to cut down their taxes and improve their housing, they will be unable to do so.

THIS DEBATE about whether the proposed statute was intended to discriminate against one section of the population obscured the central issue of whether it is wise policy to encourage fast and furious childbearing, irrespective of all social and economic consequences.

Dr. Raphaela Bilsky, a mild-mannered but dedicated opponent of the proposed law, brought formidable arguments in favour of planned parenthood. She proved that 90 per cent of the families who need social welfare aid are those in which there are more than three children. One of her witnesses, Dr. Chaim Adler, the Hebrew University sociologist, added bitterly that we had already bred a second generation of social welfare cases, and that now we were going to produce a third.

THE STRANGEST people seem to be ignorant of modern methods of recreating without procreating. On "Behind the Headlines," we saw the obverse side of the coin of fruitfulness; what women can do about abortions under the existing law.

I must say frankly that I was amazed that Miriam, the heroine of the interview, had ever got herself into such a mess: 25, a student and waitress, with as clear and independent a mind as one could hope to find, she seemed just the type to remember to take her pill at the right time in the right way. Something nevertheless went wrong, and she went on a prolonged odyssey in search of a suitable committee, under the existing law, to recommend that she have a legal operation to get rid of the foetus.

We were told by Rina Daniel that the law specifies clearly that unmarried women should be entitled to have abortions — there are so many other categories that almost every woman wanting an abortion could be accommodated under one section or another. But, as T.S. Eliot tells us, a shadow falls between the idea and the reality, between the conception and the creation — in this case, the non-creation.

With regard to putting the Abortion Law into practice, we were given to understand in this interview that the falling Shadow is the desire of the gynaecologists, nurses and social workers to safeguard the vast incomes of physicians performing private operations. The Health Ministry had apparently given different statistics to Rina and to Meni Pe'er; she was told that 3,600 legal abortions had been performed in hospitals in 1978, he that the figure was 10,000. Her estimate is that there are 50,000 to 100,000 abortions performed each year, so the number of private operations must be vast.

ONE OF THE programmes most calculated to stimulate contraception and discourage fruitfulness, however much this may be needed by the country, is "Family Situation," on Instructional Television.

The family is normally depicted as utterly repulsive, father, mother and children vying with each other to win the prize as the most loathsome specimen of humanity ever to inflict his or her selfish desires on somebody else. I cannot imagine any unmarried Israeli seeing this programme and thinking that the time was ripe to earn some of Mr. Harlap's bounty.

This week for a change, a token amount of kindness was displayed by daddy and the children, because mommy was ill. It was made clear, however, that they would revert to their normal odious selves as soon as she recovered. A pity.

Against this background, I was not surprised that Billie turned down an offer of marriage from debonair Donovan in this week's "Lou Grant." She obviously preferred a byline to a baby. Or maybe she had seen "Family Situation."

The "Trinity Tale" must have been completely incomprehensible to those viewers who have never consumed vast quantities of ale and sung bawdy songs after sporting contests — in other words, to most Israelis. Miraculously, there was a long stretch of exquisite colour.

Round-the-clock success

By LYNDA GOLDMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

GALEI ZAHAL, the Israel Defence Forces radio station, has come a long way since its first broadcast 28 years ago, when it began as a four-hour military programme to provide information for soldiers and teach them Hebrew. Today, Galei Zahal broadcasts around the clock every day, and acts as an instrument to educate soldiers, while providing them and the public with popular music and frequent newsflashes and newsreels.

The station has come so far that it is now a serious competitor to Israel Radio itself.

Many newsworthy events are first announced through Galei Zahal's "red telephone," which is open from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. every day except Saturday.

The idea of the red telephone, admits Zvi Rimon, a civilian editor of the station's newsflashes, was taken from popular radio programmes in the U.S. and Europe.

The phone itself is located in a small, dingy room on the third floor of the broadcasting station. It is manned by Rimon and a young girl soldier, Shlomit Zuta. On busier days it never stops ringing. While Zuta answers the phone, Rimon edits news stories that come either from the wire services or the country's various newspapers, as well as from the station's newsreel programme.

"Although we had many phony calls when we first began broadcasting the service 18 months ago," says Rimon, "we never aired information that wasn't true."

Rimon attributes this impeccable record to the fact that when a call comes through on the red phone, it is checked and then double-checked with a proper information source, such as the police or the fire department.

"In extreme situations we send out special reporters to check the information and then they give us an on-the-spot report," he says.

Listeners who call in news tips on the red telephone (whose number is 03-83022) are awarded IL100 if the item is aired.

"The primary obligation of the red telephone," says Rimon, "is not only to the soldiers in the country, but to all the listeners of Galei Zahal.

"We constantly get calls about lost children, which send us on child-finding campaigns," says Rimon. "One day we actually got a call from a listener who had lost his parakeet. Believe it or not, we found the bird for him."

So popular has the red telephone become that, when news breaks, people immediately call the hot line.

"We get the news as fast as possible, keep it as short as possible and use simple language to convey it so that everyone can understand," says Rimon. This format, he believes, has contributed to the success of the idea.

ANOTHER success at Galei Zahal is the light programme aired every morning for one hour from 7 a.m. The programme, which began two years ago, has created the army station's first radio star: Alex Ansky, a civilian member of the staff who used to be an actor.

"We get hundreds of letters each week," says Zvi Shapira, Galei Zahal's newly-appointed director, "from women who claim they can't start the day without Alex. Some of the letters are almost pornographic."

Ansky, who is presently on a month's leave to the Philippines, where he was invited by that country's president, has brought the army station into the Israeli home by creating its first radio family programme.

Every morning Ansky sends the kids off to school, summarizes the news headlines for housewives, and provides them with light entertainment sandwiched between the intimate conversations he has with listeners who call in.

Also new at Galei Zahal and tremendously popular is its live broadcast of TV's Mabat news programme. The army station takes credit for the diminishing number of automobile accidents on the roads in the evening hours since July. Listeners simply turn on Galei Zahal at 9 p.m. and hear Haim Yavin and his team broadcast the day's events without having to rush home in order to catch the news on TV.

Pinhas Edan, who manages the news and the 30 employees in that department, believes that Galei Zahal has become an unofficial but professional school of journalism.

Nearly half of the station's employees are people doing national service. Many of them are trained and used as reporters, radio technicians, editors, producers and production assistants. The station goes a step further by training soldiers in the repair of radio equipment.

"Most of the journalists and reporters at Israel Radio and Television House are veterans of Galei Zahal," notes Edam. "And that includes some of the foreign correspondents based in New York, Washington and Europe."

The army station's critics — which at one time included Defence Minister Weizman — claim that it is a financial burden on a country that already has three civilian radio stations. The government, they argue, shouldn't have to finance a special military station that devotes a mere 23 per cent of its broadcasting time to military subjects.

Shapira, however, feels that the IL18m. budgeted for Galei Zahal this year is money well spent.

"One hour of broadcasting time costs us eight times less than it does Kol Yisrael," says Shapira. "We have no foreign correspondents, we use free-lancers instead, we train soldiers in the field of radio and journalism and we provide educational programmes, like 'university on the air' to soldiers and reservists, who are after all, one and the same."

Whether or not Galei Zahal serves as a strictly military radio station, however, one argument in its favour is that when the other Israeli radio stations and TV are on a strike, the army station stays on the air.

An elegant performance

MUSIC

YUVAL TRIO: Jonathan Zak, piano; Uri Pianka, violin; Simca Reied, cello (Targ Music Centre, Ein Karem, February 5). Dvorak: Trio, opus 90 ("Dumky"); Mendelssohn: Trio in D Minor, opus 49.

A PROGRAMME of romantic music obscures the dangers of sentimentality. Yet the Yuval Trio elegantly got around this obstacle by an extrovert, but controlled, attitude. The three youthful artists play with an engaging, outgoing manner. They are not afraid of showing emotional commitment, indulging occasionally in romantic sighs and stresses. But they never lose tempo or impetus. Moreover, they are well-balanced and perfectly synchronized.

Obviously accustomed to larger halls, the trio employed a bit too robust dynamics for the intimate Targ Centre. The rhapsodic Dvorak Trio had the spirit of "Dumka," an Ukranian word meaning "lament," or "complaint." Its melancholy declarations and the dance-like section with a quicker tempo received a fine interpretation.

Mendelssohn's enormously facile writing is at its best, perhaps, in this Trio in D Minor. The rendition was brilliant — faultless and fluent. Jonathan Zak rolled off his strings of notes, seemingly thousands of them, without moving a muscle. The three artists visibly enjoyed playing this beautifully superficial music as much as the audience enjoyed hearing it.

The lovely encore was the Finale from a Trio by Haydn in E Minor (Hoboken 12). It whetted our appetite for more evenings with the Yuval Trio. YOHANAN ROEHM.

MUSIC SPECTRUM presented by the Israel Broadcasting Authority, edited and directed by Boris Berman. Heinz Holliger, oboe; Boris Berman, harpsichord and piano; Mira Zakai, alto; Sara Reichenthal, oboe; Ze'ev Dorman, bassoon; Yair Kless, violin; Robert Moses, violin and viola; Michael Applemann, viola; Mark Bergman, cello; David Daneel, doublebass (Tel Aviv Museum, February 3). Jan Dismas Zelenka: Lamentation No. 2 from "Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremiah" for alto, violin, bassoon and basso continuo; Sonata No. 2 for two oboes, bassoon and basso continuo; Holliger: "Ella," three nocturnes for piano; Study on Multiphonics for oboe. Johann Ludwig Krebs: Concerto for Harpsichord, Oboe Obligate and Strings; J.S. Bach: arias from cantatas No. 156, 43, 106 (Actus Tragicus), 114; Sinfonia from cantata No. 156.

AS USUAL, Boris Berman provided us with a delicious programme. One must increasingly admire his limitless inventiveness and wealth of fascinating ideas. As the musical director of this series, Berman also provides perfect performances. This time he had a great partner, Heinz Holliger, whose participation in most of the pieces made listening to the various ensembles a real feast. What really surprised was that, although this was an ad hoc assembly of musicians, it approached perfection in music-making.

Zelenka, a contemporary of Bach, surprised with his refreshing music, especially in his Sonata No. 2. On the other hand, Krebs, a pupil of the great Bach, did not convince us with his concerto for harpsichord that his music has been unfairly forgotten.

The two pieces Holliger composed revealed two different worlds. His three nocturnes, especially the first and third, are highly poetic songs of night. Berman was immensely refined in performing them, and the pieces assumed many meanings beyond their delicate sound combinations.

Holliger's Study of Multiphonics for oboe is much more than a study. Though consisting mainly of effects, the piece undoubtedly carries a musical message. His wizardry put together a seemingly impossible combination of sounds; harmonic intervals, chords of three tones and, in the trill section, an allusion of a four-tone chord.

In all four Bach arias, Miss Zakai proved that she has become a singer of great musical depth and insight.

All the instrumental parts with the arias were delicious and whenever Holliger participated, he added something magnificent.

BENJAMIN BAR-AM

Brad Davis in a scene from "Midnight Express."

Turkish terror

CINEMA/David George

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS: Starring Brad Davis, John Hurt and Paul Smith. Directed by Alan Parker. (Dekel Theatre, Tel Aviv)

PRISON STORIES abound this year. Recently in Tel Aviv we have seen Dustin Hoffman in "Straight Time" and Bruce Davis in "Short Eyes," both shocking stories of American prisons. But neither matches "Midnight Express" for realism and barbarity.

This is the true story of an American boy caught trying to smuggle hashish out of Turkey. This is his first criminal offence, and in most cases such crimes are dealt with lightly in Turkey. But this time the legal system is hunting for a scapegoat, and he is sentenced first to four and then to 30 years imprisonment.

Billy Hayes (Brad Davis) is incarcerated in Sagma prison, where the usual rules of humanity are suspended. Rape, sodomy, the habitual use of hash and heroin are the rule. Men peddle everything from dope to the bodies of children; entrepreneurs stay in prison only to make a profit on the misery of their fellow prisoners; there are squealers, sadists and perverts of every variety. Here one has to maintain one's physical well-being as well as his sanity. These are not simple chores, and most do not succeed.

FURTHER, the majority of the guards thrive on misery and pain. Control is easily maintained despite large numbers of inmates. Periodic, grotesque beatings and a general policy of torture are adequate deterrents against escape.

The film is not a masterpiece of the cinema, but it is far more than ordinary "entertainment" and in many ways it is very well made. The violence depicted is not unnecessary, for it is an integral part of the story. The portrayal of the nearly total degradation of human beings is not exaggerated, for it is upon such degradation that such prisons function.

The most terrible moments, however, are not those of violence. They are those in which one is aware of the total sense of "aloneness" and desperation that the inmate feels at having lost control over his life.

There are also moments of beauty and dignity. When Billy kisses his friend Max goodbye before he attempts his escape, we know that there is a love that has managed to survive even the most degrading and torturous experiences. This is not a love of passion or even of friendship — it is a love and a kiss that can be shared only by human beings who have suffered together in ways that no words can make real but that this film manages to portray convincingly.

THE ACTING is often excellent. Brad Davis portrays young Billy Hayes with compassion and conviction. His fear is real and his desperation is frightening. John Hurt plays Max in one of this experienced actor's finest roles. Billy's father is played beautifully by Mike Kellin and the tears and pain that he feels for his son encompass the audience. Paul Smith plays Hamidou, the sadistic chief guard, so well that it would be difficult to encounter him on the street and separate him from his role.

The Film Censorship Board reportedly debated hard and long about whether to allow Israeli audiences to view this film. Whether they debated because of concern for the relations Israel has with Turkey or because of the argument that there is "too much" violence in the film is something we cannot know.

That they could have even considered banning such a film is, however, a powerful statement against censorship. This film speaks about freedom and justice, and should not be denied to any society that strives to be free and just.

Carter's casualties abroad

Thirteen policy analysts have just published their evaluations of the Carter Administration's successes and failures in the 1978 world arena. Their views constitute a special edition of the journal "Foreign Affairs," released this week. UPI Foreign News Editor WALTER LOGAN summarizes the report.

NEW YORK. — The Carter administration's foreign policy in 1978 was marked by fragmentation, incoherence and indecisivness, according to articles written for a special issue of "Foreign Affairs" released Wednesday.

In the study, entitled "America and the World 1978," 13 scholars and foreign policy analysts characterize U.S. achievements and failures during the past year.

Stanley Hoffman, Professor of Government at Harvard, said President Carter has a lack of well-defined strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union and relies largely on "ad hoc-ism," or temporary expediency.

"The single most striking feature of America's conduct in the world in 1978 was fragmentation. Washington's diplomacy went off in a bewildering variety of directions, and policy-making was marked by a number of conflicting factors and centrifugal forces," Hoffman wrote.

Hedley Bull, Professor of International Relations at Oxford, said Carter has "by and large...remained faithful to the main lines of his policy while being threatened by domestic and foreign developments. In the course of 1978 the overall balance of power between the Western powers and the Soviet Union appears to have become less stable, a radical shift in either direction more possible."

Daniel Yankelovich, a public opinion analyst examining the role of the American public in foreign policy, said "the continuing mood of skepticism and lack of confidence in the presidency can no longer be blamed on...fast receding historical episodes (such as Vietnam or Watergate). Today, public mistrust of presidential leadership...is an almost accidental by-product of a larger decline of confidence in government that has been gathering force for 20 years."

HISTORIAN Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., writes that Carter's human rights campaign has "significantly altered the international atmosphere."

The U.S. "has placed human rights on the world's agenda — and on the world's conscience," Schlesinger claims. But Hoffman says that "after the debauch of realism we are again experiencing the frustrations of idealism...The campaign against nuclear proliferation has been muted, and a credibility as well as a policy gap has been widening between the president's ardent sermons for human rights and the place they occupy in American diplomacy."

Other highlights from the 377-page journal, the first such issue in the 56-year history of the foreign affairs publication:

Israel and the Arabs: John C. Campbell, former director of studies of the Council on Foreign Relations, says that whether a formal peace treaty between Israel and Egypt is concluded or not, "the immediate prospect is not one of tranquillity. The U.S., after producing its diplomatic miracle at Camp David, will have to face the continuation of the Arab-Israeli conflict in a new phase that will generate new crises and require new strategies.

"Those who have called the Middle East an American empire are not far off the mark..." Campbell says. "But an empire has to be managed, in the sense of keeping within tolerable limits the conflicts and disorders of local forces and the challenge of other powers, and it is by no means certain that the U.S. has the will or capacity for that task."

Africa: Colin Legum of the London "Observer": "The trend which first began to emerge in 1975 was clearly evident three years later. Africa had become the scene of new Soviet efforts possibly foreshadowing important shifts even in the balance of world power between the West and the Soviets...

"While still clearly the dominant influence in Africa, the Western countries were thrown on the defensive and groped for new ways of protecting their interests there. In the open diplomatic confrontation with the Soviet Union and Cuba, the West came off worst in the Horn of Africa but continued to manoeuvre actively in southern Africa."

Legum said only 10 of the 49 member states of the Organization of African Unity "will usually defend any form of Soviet or Cuban intervention and almost three times that number are likely to oppose it. A middle group of 13 countries hold the balance "and their voices are usually decisive in determining the majority stand of the OAU on issues of foreign involvement."

Iran: Campbell writes, "The shah's loss of power... does not necessarily mean a gain in Soviet influence. The religious leaders, if they take power, may well be more anti-Soviet than the shah...but the change will be damaging and possibly disastrous to America's position and prestige..."

The Gulf Region: Campbell says the U.S. had placed its reliance on the "two-pillar" system of Saudi Arabia and Iran, but the Iranian pillar has been shaken to its foundations. "If Iran turns entirely inward or becomes a prey to chaos, no Gulf country can fill that role. Saudi Arabia, despite its great wealth, has neither the military power nor the political experience and influence to do so."

China: Columnist Stanley Karnow: "The establishment of formal diplomatic relations between the U.S. and the People's Republic of China on New Year's Day 1979 dramatized an extraordinary year... If history can be said to be marked by decisive moments, 1978 was the climax."

Indochina: Karnow says the U.S. "had to swallow hard on human rights objections to the domestic conduct of the Cambodian regime, to arrive by the end of the year at a public position condemning Vietnam's intervention and linking any future hope of normalization with Hanoi to the course of the developing war situation."

Asean: The five member countries — Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, the Philippines and Singapore — realized that the conflict between the communist powers and their surrogates in Asia was, in Karnow's words, "serving to add cohesion to their group which... has tended until the last two or three years to resemble a debating society rather than a solid organization. Then, under the stimulus of communist victories in Indochina and worldwide recession — and with encouragement from Japan in particular, Asean began to act more vigorously as a group and concurrently to expect more concrete signs of support from the U.S."

Korea: Karnow says Carter's change of his original plan for withdrawing U.S. combat forces from South Korea "reassured Asians, members of Congress and a segment of U.S. public opinion, (but) his back-and-forth motion raised doubts about his consistency."

Japan: "The Japanese, who had been especially upset by President Carter's intention to withdraw U.S. ground forces from South Korea, regained their composure after he revised his plan. And they were heartened by his repeated assertions that the relationship with Japan is the cornerstone of America's policy in Asia...But if the U.S. and Japan have overcome many of the diplomatic differences that have divided them in recent years, their trade conflict has degenerated into what one prominent American official calls 'a nightmare'."

Europe: David Watt, director of the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London: "At the end of 1978...belief in the American economy and the dollar as the mainspring of the Western economic system was badly undermined [illegible] Europe...The reassertion of [illegible] power and rights of Congress vis-a-vis the Carter administration created fundamental doubts about the stability of American foreign policy." Watt says 1978 saw the "temporary banishment of the communist factor in West European politics...In West Germany, the strange years of neo-anarchist terrorism associated with the name of Andreas Baader and Ulrike Meinhoff came to an end, Northern Ireland had its quietest year in the last 10...Above all, the young democracy of Spain seemed more and more firmly rooted...

"These political successes, however, have floated on the surface of an economic stream which all observers perceived to be flowing in the opposite direction. And it was fear that this current could sweep away all prospect of cooperation within Europe or even within the Nato alliance that haunted leaders on both sides of the Atlantic...

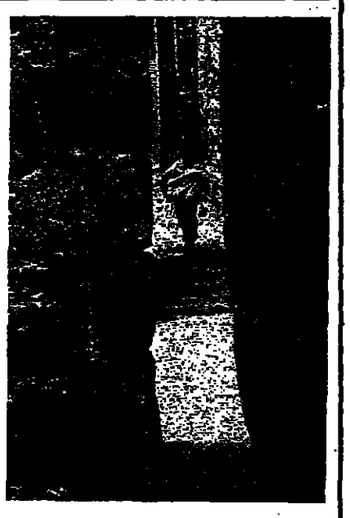
"The British, with their [illegible] imperial insularity, their hoard of North Sea oil and their stubborn broken-down economy, were [illegible] fearful obstacle to European progress. But there was at least a saving facet to their vices, epitomized at present by their phobia about the European community — namely their tendency to think instinctively in terms of the American connection."

U.S.-Soviet Relations: Adam Ulam of Harvard University: "[illegible] was shown in 1978 how illusory it is to expect that by trying to resolve one of the major issues dividing the two superpowers, even one as supremely important as strategic arms limitation, the U.S. can bring about a magic improvement in the overall situation...

"In their more reflective moments, Russian leaders may regret having succumbed to the temptations which, because of the West's disarray and indecision, appeared so irresistibly alluring."

Squeezing Syria's Jews

This week, Prime Minister Menahem Begin pledged continued Israeli efforts to secure the release of Jews from Syria. Today GEORGE E. GRUEN reports on the recent deterioration of the position of Syrian Jewry.



IN THE PAST few weeks there has been a dramatic worsening in the attitude of the Syrian authorities towards the country's 5,000 Jews. This has led to fears that all the hard-won improvements in the daily life of the Jewish community in recent years may be undone.

In the last month alone some 20 men in Damascus and Aleppo were brutally beaten and detained for several days by the Muhabarat (intelligence or secret police), apparently because they were suspected of helping Jewish families who successfully managed to flee the country. Syria continues to bar Jewish emigration.

The Syrian authorities have also reimposed restrictions on internal travel and transfer of property that had previously been lifted. Muhabarat agents are present at synagogue services, and Jews have been warned that any Jewish home that does not have lights on in the evening will immediately be searched.

It is not clear whether these measures are solely prompted by Syrian annoyance at the increased "illegal" departure by Jews or whether they reflect a fundamental reversal of the liberalization that had been gradually introduced by President Hafez Assad after international publicity on the plight of the Jewish community and because Syria desires to improve its relations with the U.S.

SYRIAN-AMERICAN relations have been strained recently over Syrian military involvement in Lebanon and Syria's vehement criticism of the Camp David agreements. The growing rapprochement between the long-feuding Syrian and Iraqi regimes, highlighted by the visit of Iraqi President Ahmed Hasan al-Bakr to Damascus last month amid reports that the two countries are planning to unite, also raises fears in the Jewish community. Iraqi brutality against the Jews has exceeded that of the Syrians and culminated in the hangings in Baghdad in 1969 of Iraqi Jews falsely charged with spying for Israel, the U.S. and the Shah of Iran. (Paradoxically at other times Iraq has permitted its Jews to emigrate freely, and today only some 300 elderly persons remain.)

There have been persistent reports in Syria of attempted coups by factions opposing the intervention in Lebanon or the rapprochement with Iraq, and Assad recently replaced several military and civilian officials. Assad is a member of the Shi'ite minority (known as Alawis in Syria) and thus also faces opposition from some Sunni elements. One cannot predict the effect the resurgence of Shi'ite Islamic fanaticism in Iran may have upon the internal situation within Syria and the position of the Jews.

About a year and a half ago the government removed the requirement that Jews must have written permission from the Muhabarat to travel from one city to another. Then, a few months later, the government reintroduced it although in some cases simply telling the Muhabarat of one's intention to travel was sufficient — no written permission was needed. But after one large family escaped, the requirement was added that Jews must also notify the Muhabarat upon their arrival in whichever city they are permitted to visit.

Early in 1977, promises were also made that the special designation "Musawi" (of the Mosaic faith) in red ink on identity cards, passports, drivers' licences and banking documents would be eliminated. New identity cards tended to have Musawi entered in blue ink in the place for religion — although in most new identity cards for Moslems and Christians, the space is left blank. Some Jews continue to have red markings on their papers, and the police have occasionally refused to issue new documents on the excuse that the change will be made when the present document, such as a driver's licence, expires. Recently the authorities have issued documents with Musawi again in distinctive colours.

Jews also still face difficulties in disposing of property and are usually only permitted to sell a house or car if they prove the money is being used to purchase a replacement. The special government committee on Jewish affairs, which was supposed to have been abolished in 1977, also continues to exist.

The property of any family who leaves is sequestered by the government. One family left property valued at more than 3,000,000 Syrian pounds (about IL19.5m.), testimony to the lack of freedom left in Syria even by well-to-do Jews.

BESIDES BARRING Jewish emigration, the Syrian government looks with disfavour on non-Jewish emigration as well, for brain drain and other reasons but non-Jewish Syrians are increasingly able to travel abroad relatively freely and even to emigrate. The number of students in the U.S. for university studies has gone up from about 30 in 1975 to over 400 this year.

Some Syrian Jews have also been permitted to travel abroad, but with the exception of one outstanding young doctor, who, after persistent interventions, was finally permitted to come to the U.S. for advanced training, Syrian Jews are usually permitted out only for brief visits for business, medical or personal reasons. Even in these cases, other members of the family must remain behind and a security bond, usually sizable, must be deposited with the authorities. Members of Syria's Jewish community who are too poor to raise the 25,000 pounds deposit are thus prevented from even briefly seeing relatives abroad from whom they have been cut off for many years.

This report was distributed as a background memorandum by the American Jewish Committee.

READERS' LETTERS

MENTAL RETARDATION

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — I was gratified to read of the leadership exercised by President Yitzhak Navon in the area of habilitation of the mentally retarded.

I would like to correct certain statements attributed to President Navon which are not entirely correct. Nature does not equally distribute mental handicaps among families of the rich and the poor, the educated and uneducated. Of the "60 per cent" of the mentally handicapped who were identified as mildly handicapped, the overwhelming majority come from lower socio-economic backgrounds, from large families where parents are poorly educated.

Nature is more equitable in the distribution of severe mental handicaps, which fortunately are much less prevalent than the milder variety. The probability of a severely retarded child being born to a rich or poor, educated or uneducated family seems much more equal, though the advantages that a well-to-do family can bestow may minimize the impact of some of the handicap. Likewise a severely handicapped child may place a greater economic handicap on a poorer family.

However, the prognosis "one out of 10 (of all retarded) need to be hospitalized in institutions," though widely held among the Israeli public and professionals, is greatly inflated and results in overcrowded institutions with long waiting lists for admission. Recent research has indicated that many severely retarded individuals are capable of learning to care for their basic needs, can live in supervised settings outside the home and outside the institution, and can learn vocational skills that can help to contribute towards their own support. What are needed are alternatives to institutions. The Jerusalem hostel is one such alternative. Most important is providing services that support parents' efforts to keep their severely retarded children in the community.

Finally I would like to correct a pessimistic statement attributed to Akim chairman Zalmanov — that we have no cure or preventive measures for retardation. This is only partially correct. Some forms of retardation have been (or can be) virtually eliminated through early diagnosis and dietary control (e.g. cretinism, coeliac disease, and phenylketonuria). Others can be minimized through prenatal diagnosis and genetic counseling (e.g. Tay Sachs disease, Down's syndrome). One serious contributory problem is the high incidence of first-cousin marriages in certain segments of our population, which increases the chances of genetic defects. Another is a lack of awareness on the part of parents that the chances of having a Down's syndrome (mongoloid) baby rises astronomically with the age of the mother (especially past 35). Conversely, there have been certain experiments (notably the Milwaukee Project) which have succeeded in preventing mild mental retardation through early intervention and intensive work among high-risk families. The data have been very encouraging...dramatic and convincing.

We should look to applying this knowledge to breaking the vicious cycle of poverty, ignorance, and retardation among many of our less fortunate citizens. The benefits, social and economic, are to be shared by all, as more of these individuals become less dependent on public charity. This August, Jerusalem will play host to the International Association on the Scientific Study of Mental Deficiency. Many of the exciting findings from Israel and abroad will be discussed there. The continued leadership of President Navon, Zalmanov, and others is imperative.

SENSELESS DESTRUCTION

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — Why do we have to demolish the houses in which terrorists receive shelter and in which bombs are made for use against people? What good does it do, leaving people homeless in the middle of winter? Is it a deterrent, calculated to frighten other Arabs from engaging in terrorist activities?

The contrary is true. We must be very stupid indeed not to realize that the whole village will be [illegible] great anger and become our enemy. Is it meant as a punishment? What an indictment on our sense of justice!

We must stop this destruction now, before it is too late.

"CLEAR AND PRESENT DANGER"

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — The "clear and present danger" test should be the criterion for taking punitive action against those who express sympathy for the PLO. That is, if their words — as opposed to any overt acts of subversion — do not constitute a clear danger, then their right to speak should not be abridged.

This question should be decided by the courts, not by the press or the man in the street.

[illegible] contrast to the action in the [illegible]mercial banking sector, [illegible]gage bank shares were on the [illegible]le. Oil Exploration of Paz, perhaps reacting to the announcement that the company will not pay shareholders any dividends in 1978, was 5.5 points lower at 156.5.

Nechushtan was the leader among industrials as the bearer shares jumped by a full 10 per cent to 1127. The registered shares were unchanged. Shemen rose by 4.3 per cent.

Jordan Exploration warrants were 6.6 per cent higher. Export Investments, both registered and bearer were "buyers only" and were raised by five per cent without any trading taking place.

The index-linked bond market was uneven and trading was quiet. On balance the market moved higher but not appreciably, so. Otzar Hashilton Hamekomi announced a final dividend for 1978 in the order of 23 per cent. The board of directors has also recommended the payment of 15 per cent in bonus shares.

Weinschal to head Bank of Israel

Post Economic Reporter

David Weinschal was Wednesday named director-general of the Bank of Israel, replacing Dr. Eliezer Sheffer, who will continue working for the bank as deputy to the governor, Arnon Gafny.

Weinschal had served until now as the head of the government bond division of the Bank.

The head of the Foreign Exchange department in the bank, Moshe Meirav, has announced he plans to leave the job at the end of March. His post will be filled by Moshe Benoussilio.

[illegible]orker shortage causes [illegible]ss of export orders

By AARON SETTNER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

[illegible]port orders worth hundreds of [illegible]ands of dollars, or even [illegible]ms, are being lost because of a [illegible]e shortage of production [illegible]rs.

[illegible]t estimate came yesterday [illegible] the Israel Productivity [illegible]te, after a nationwide survey [illegible] manufacturing companies — [illegible] medium and small. The firms [illegible]ented the following industry [illegible]hes: Textiles/clothing, food, [illegible]iture, leathergoods, [illegible]/paperboard, rubber/plastics, [illegible]icals, metalworking / [illegible]nery and electrical / elec-[illegible]tute interviewers polled com-[illegible] managers, and 90 per cent of [illegible] complained they were short of [illegible]rs. The problem was especial-[illegible]tute in the metalworking / [illegible]nery and textiles/clothing sec-[illegible]

[illegible] shortage covered both skilled [illegible]nskilled manpower. Plants in [illegible]alem were in an especially dif-[illegible]position since there is heavy [illegible]etition for workers in that city from non-manufacturing, service-type industries.

The interviewers were told that fewer Jewish young men and women are turning towards industry after secondary school, and the ready availability of Arab workers from the administered areas is about to end as the saturation point is approaching.

Most company managers believe the manpower situation will worsen after a peace treaty is signed with Egypt, and large-scale job recruitment gets under way for the massive Sinai-to-Negev defence line relocation project.

The severe industrial worker shortage has led most plants to work only one shift. This means machinery and equipment are only partly utilized.

Many industrialists with obsolete machinery are reluctant to invest in new, more efficient plants and equipment because, as one of them told Productivity Institute interviewers, "What's the use of investing large sums in modernizing operations when we are not sure we'll be able to get workers to operate the new machines?"

The 'beetle' is back

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Volkswagen "beetle" is coming back, Ya'acov Reemy, managing director of Champion Motors, told the press here yesterday.

The Germans stopped manufacturing the "bug" last year, but have found out that there is still a market for it, so they renewed its manufacture at their Mexican plant.

Reemy said that starting next month his firm will receive the deluxe 1200cc model of the "beetle" here. It will sell for IL 189,330, plus VAT.

He said that this year Champion Motors hopes to sell over 5,000 automobiles, compared to 2,000 during the 1978 model year. The company's record year was 1973, when 9,000 cars were sold.

The press conference was held to introduce the new Audi 80. The car's many features include a safer body, a huge 68 litre fuel tank and a meter indicating at what speed the car gives maximum fuel economy.

Love conquers all, and as a result of consumers' love for the 'beetle' Volkswagen says that it will put it back on the market.

Some local markets more profitable than exports

By MACABEE DEAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The success of the "export drive" this year depends in great measure on the profitability of sales abroad being considerably greater than those on the local market, according to Rami Gutt, director-general of the Export Institute. In 1978 sales of industrial goods abroad rose by more than 26 per cent, to stand at $3.25b.

"During much of the past year," he told The Post, "we have witnessed a local market ready to buy anthing at any price — and this means good profits for manufacturers. At the same time, the cost of manufacturing goods has risen considerably faster than the devaluation of the Israel pound vis-à-vis the dollar. This has led to a shrinkage of profits on sales abroad. Some 70-75 per cent of all our exports are in dollars."

The main industrial category in 1978 was diamonds, which brought in $1.3 b., followed by "technological" goods, ranging from metals to sophisticated electronics, which brought in $780m. (This figure includes about $42m. in defence items.) Next come chemicals and mining, $435m., processed foods, $225m., and light industry (furniture, jewellery, etc.), $170m.

As for "technological products," the Export Institute is planning to exhibit at 25 international fairs and exhibitions, compared to 18 in 1978.

Special efforts will be made to sell aeronautic parts, instrumentation, and aeronautic accessories. "These were mainly produced here for the defence industries, but they are being modified to meet the needs of civilian aircraft." The Institute is now looking for more distribution channels abroad in this field, especially in the U.S.

Attempts will be made to invade the "Orange belt" on America's West Coast with irrigation equipment. Israeli exporters will attend five agricultural congresses where irrigation equipment will be shown.

It is also planned to open a sales office in West Europe, probably in Amsterdam, sometime this spring, to sell automobile spare parts. The plan calls for stocking a nearby warehouse so that there will be a constant supply on hand, obviating the need of sending rush orders by air to Europe to fill sudden orders.

In the field of building supplies and materials, the same idea is planned for Europe, with the sales office most likely in Southern France, since the climate is somewhat similar to that of Israel and similar construction materials are used.

As for processed foods, Gutt said, the Institute hopes to "create" a brand name which all the various companies in Israel will use, thus creating a lasting "image." (This was done with fresh fruits and vegetables years ago.)

[illegible]n crisis fears send gold still higher

[illegible]ON (Reuter). — Amid more [illegible] of anxiety in the international [illegible]ss community over the Iran [illegible] the price of gold — the ancient [illegible]by in times of uncertainty — [illegible] to still another new record [illegible]day.

[illegible] there were reports of some [illegible]ring on world foreign exchange [illegible]ts later, and the gold price was brought slightly down from the day's peak.

The metal was fixed at $254 an ounce on the London bullion market in the morning, its fourth successive record and well up on Wednesday afternoon's fix of $251.60.

The events also reflected a dramatic new weakness in the dollar, financial experts said.

A favourite target

PUBLICATION in the "Washington Post" this week of allegations by a former U.S. consular official in Jerusalem that Israel practises systematic brutality in interrogating PLO suspects has, as might be expected, stirred much passion.

It is plain that the charges, so reminiscent of the torture accusations made more than a year ago by the "Sunday Times" of London, originated only with Arab sources. The U.S. consular official who authored them, a self-admitted PLO supporter, made no effort to corroborate the torture charges by Arabs whom she interviewed for visa purposes. Moreover, there is every reason to believe that her superiors at the U.S. Consulate General in Jerusalem, who authorized the cables to be despatched to the State Department also did not seek corroboration from Israeli sources. Certainly part of the reason is that the Consulate General, presumably on instruction, maintains contacts largely with East Jerusalem and the West Bank and has hardly any intercourse with Israeli officialdom.

It is interesting, therefore, that the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv, which is in touch with Israeli life, disputed the claim of the consular official that torture was a deliberate and systematic interrogation device.

Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir yesterday, in refuting the allegations, noted that the International Red Cross has had full access to all Arab security detainees within 14 days after detention. Only in six out of 1,278 cases did the IRC request further investigation into charges of brutal treatment. All were carried out and were found to be without basis.

Yet it must also be said that the responsible Israeli authorities have not proven very willing to confront the repeated allegations of torture which find their way into the world press and other reports. This was The Jerusalem Post's own experience last year when it investigated, and largely refuted, the charges published in the "Sunday Times" of London. The evidence gathered in refutation was collected despite the authorities, rather than with their help.

One reason for this hard-nosed determination to maintain complete secrecy, despite the damage done to Israel's image, is the security forces' resolve that their highest priority must be to prevent terrorism and capture the perpetrators and not to worry about Israel's image.

But there is also a less rational fatalistic sense that even if information wholly refuting such charges were made available, it would not be fully believed or would not persuade those who cannot understand the imperatives of combating terror.

This fatalism about a hostile outside world clashes with any effort to explain Israel's policies abroad.

Certainly there is a danger that the security forces, like the police in their dealings with Jewish criminals, might, in specific instances, lapse into brutality. This is a danger that faces any democratic country with any kind of police institutions.

In the civilian area, the courts offer a safeguard to this, though it can never be complete, as Justice Haim Cohn's strictures this week against the police indicate.

But Israel's system of military jurisprudence, which governs terrorist trials, is drawn from the same fund of manpower and legal tradition as the civilian system. It is inconceivable therefore that two wholly differing standards of acceptable police conduct could apply.

Despite the reluctance of the security forces to admit the reality of Israel's public opinion needs, some way should nevertheless be found to lay to rest the allegations that periodically erupt on front pages around the world and which could ultimately affect opinion at home as well.

POSTSCRIPTS

CORAL WORLD, Eilat's underwater observatory, has an exotic new fish on display. It's a one-of-a-kind hybrid from the beautiful butterfly fish family.

The zebra-striped fish, which has a bright yellow tail and a velvety black patch over each eye, was apparently sired by a diagonal-lined butterfly fish and a threadfin butterfly fish. Aquarium curator David Fridman, who discovered the rare prize, reports that the chances of another such hybrid ever being bred are almost nil.

Fridman and his staff spotted the fish while on a routine dive at El Maimlach, 100 kilometres south of Eilat. Fridman is always on the lookout for unusual fish and is credited with discovering several new species previously unknown to the international community of ichthyologists. One find, a lovely magenta creature common in the Red Sea, has even been named for him. J.B.

GOOD NEWS for the fabulously-footed. A reader reports that Israelis having trouble finding large-size shoes are advised to try Jaguars, made by Hamagafer in sizes up to 48, and available throughout the country. For our man in Haifa with large tootsies, our correspondent says Zameret, opposite Gan Ha'em, stocks big sizes of various styles and brands.

A JERUSALEM mother who recently took her two small children to an afternoon stage show starring comedienne-singer Tzipi Shavit found it more educational than she bargained for. First there were the mothers who puffed away on cigarettes — oblivious to the neon signs in the Beit Ha'am hall forbidding smoking and to the thought of the stampede that might result from an accidental fire. Contempt for rules, this mother knew, was nothing new in Israel society but what about the racism injected into the show by the children's darling Tzipi, who referred to something being "as white as Aulcie Perry." Will Tzipi include that line on her next record? S.S.

A kind of courage

The draft of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty, says MOSHE ARENS, is based on three untenable assumptions, and the government should have the courage to re-examine it while there is still time for Israel to do so.

"TO HALT the momentum of an accepted idea, to re-examine assumptions, is a disturbing process and requires more courage than governments can generally summon." So wrote Barbara Tuchman, in her book "Stilwell and the American Experience in China," explaining the inability of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and his chief aides to revise the United States' China policy during World War II.

That policy was based on the well-fostered illusion that Chiang Kai-shek was an enlightened democratic leader who had been fighting Japanese aggression for many years. In fact, he was a dictator heading a corrupt regime which, by threatening to come to terms with the Japanese, was blackmailing the U.S. for massive assistance, while doing everything possible to avoid contact between his ineffective armies and the Japanese invader.

These facts had been communicated to Washington, by General Stilwell, commander of the U.S. forces in the China-Burma-India theatre. But even the support of General Marshall, the chief of staff, was not sufficient to dispel the illusions so dear to Roosevelt, his aides, and much of the American public.

The courage to admit mistakes is often found only after some dramatic failure. Thus, John F. Kennedy remarked after the Bay of Pigs fiasco, "I have made a tragic mistake ... not only were our facts in error, but our policy was wrong because the premises on which it was built were wrong." Unfortunately, this degree of critical introspection was not operative at the decision-making level while the plans were being made. And again in Vietnam, the courage to re-assess U.S. policy came only when the dimensions of the mistakes were already clear to all.

The Carter administration persisted in its illusions about the nature and the ability of the Shah's regime in Iran until it was too late. Yet there was no lack of information on the character of the Shah's dictatorial rule and the scale of corruption in every part of his regime. The attempt to blame the CIA for not providing adequate warning only exposes the administration's inability to deal with facts well known to thousands of Americans in Iran long before the rioting began.

It seems that the process of reassessing information and accepted policies is disturbing and painful. Few governments can muster the courage for it, despite the conventional wisdom that facts and assumptions must be continually examined, and that in this day and age, flexibility is the key to good policy-making.

ISRAEL IS on the point of committing itself to actions, called for in the current draft of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty, that will determine its future. Withdrawal from the Gulf of Suez oilfields, abandoning Israeli naval and air bases in Sinai, and redeploying the army in the Negev will leave Israel not only smaller, but also weaker and poorer.

The expectation that in return Israel will obtain peace, or at least the withdrawal of Egypt from "the circle of war" that has surrounded Israel for over 30 years, is based on three assumptions:

- After signing the treaty in order not to endanger the new peaceful relations, Sadat will be restrained in his support for Arab demands that Israel withdraw to the 1967 borders on all fronts.
- Sadat's regime is stable, but even should he be replaced, the new ruler will honour the commitments made by Sadat to Israel.
- Egypt has joined the Western camp and will in future, allied with Israel, participate in blocking Soviet expansion in the Middle East.

This is the time, before Israel is committed to steps that cannot be easily retracted, to examine these assumptions thoroughly.

THE EXPECTATION that the treaty will pull Egypt out of the circle of war is based on the supposition that Sadat wants to disengage Egypt from its past commitment to Arab demands against Israel. Even though it is assumed that, after receiving Sinai he will continue to pay lip-service to the demands of the Palestinians, Syrians or Iraqis, it is thought that he will not risk endangering his new relationship with Israel.

These suppositions stem directly from a popular image of Sadat as a man of truth and peace, whose desire it is to concentrate his time and efforts on Egypt's social and economic ills. According to this theory, Sadat differentiates between the "holy Arab soil" in the Sinai, for which, down to the last square metre, he would send his army to war again, and Judea, Samaria, the Gaza Strip, Jerusalem, and the Golan Heights, to which his "no more war" slogan presumably applies.

It is doubtful whether this view was correct even in the euphoric days and weeks following on Sadat's visit to Jerusalem. Recent statements by Sadat, Prime Minister Mustapha Khalil and Defence Minister Kamal Hassan Ali make it clear that today, it is no more than a delusion. In a speech in Khartoum on January 20 the Egyptian President said: "...the peace cannot in any circumstances be separated from the solution of the Palestinian problem."

Some people hope that after the treaty is signed the situation will change, and Sadat's support for Arab claims will be limited to the presentation of diplomatic notes through his ambassador in Israel. They comfort themselves with the thought that even if Arab armies were deployed against Israel, Egypt would remain neutral, or at the most non-belligerent.

THE MORE one examines this scenario, the less credible it becomes. It is difficult to see what specific incentives would recommend such behaviour to Sadat. Adherence to treaties signed in the past is strongly dependent on interests as they are perceived today. Although, on occasion, governments will abide by agreements that run counter to present interests in order to preserve their reputation for trustworthiness, it is not a likely mode of behaviour for Egypt, considering its history of abrogation of treaties.

Even if we accept the theory that Sadat has decided to disengage Egypt from Arab claims against Israel, and that he can withstand the pressures that will be directed against him, as at the recent Baghdad conference, the stability of his regime is strongly in question. Considering Egypt's long tradition of dictatorship, there is little doubt that Sadat's successor will come to power by force, or threat of force, and that he is unlikely to feel bound to commitments made to Israel by his predecessor.

All Arab regimes are inherently unstable. In the past 30 years, the Arab world has experienced an average of one coup d'état per year. Most recently, in June 1978 Ahmed al-Ghashmi, the president of North Yemen, was killed by a bomb, and Robaye Ali, president of South Yemen, was executed by firing squad. More than 20 Arab rulers have been assassinated in the last 30 years. Totalitarian rule, vast corruption, and extreme inequality are the basis for this pattern of instability. One does not need intelligence services to know that the life expectancy of Arab regimes is limited. Unfortunately, Egypt is no exception.

IS IT REASONABLE to expect that future years will see Egypt standing alongside Israel to block Soviet expansion in the Middle East? Will the Egyptian navy protect the freedom of Israeli shipping through the Bab el-Mandeb Straits, against blockade by the Peoples Democratic Republic of Yemen, which is under Soviet control? Will the common challenge induce Egypt to give priority to its relations with Israel over its obligations to the Arab world?

Such a scenario is very difficult to imagine. Sadat did not abrogate his treaty of friendship with the USSR because of ideological differences. He has no commitment to the democratic way of life: turning to the U.S. was clearly based on the expectation that he would receive economic, military and diplomatic aid in greater measure and on better terms from the Americans than from the Soviets. The expectation that Egyptian armed forces will be effectively used to block Soviet expansion is based on illusions regarding Egypt's military capability and its allegiance to the free world.

THE LATEST developments in Afghanistan and Iran may be expected to trigger a reassessment of U.S. policy in the region. They are quite likely to dispel the illusion that it is possible to create a stable Arab/Moslem anti-Soviet bloc in the Middle East, and make the West realize that the regimes in these countries are built on sand, and that they have no ideological allegiance to the free world.

That realization might well [illegible] the question as to whether [illegible] removal of the Israeli [illegible] presence in the Horn of Africa [illegible] result of our withdrawal from [illegible] e-Sheikh serves Western interests.

Is there any logic in the [illegible] Force abandoning the Eitan bases in Sinai, which [illegible] been described by [illegible] generals as the best tactical bases in the Western world. Does [illegible] make sense in an energy crisis [illegible] most of the world's oil resources [illegible] located in unstable and even [illegible] friendly regions, that Israel should withdraw from the sizeable oilfields in the Gulf of Suez?

No doubt these questions will be asked, along with the question whether it is in America's interest to pursue a policy that requires weakening Israel. But what we should not rely on is that they will be asked before the Israeli withdrawal from Sinai — that is to say, before it is too late.
